WAITING.

BY J. REID. Waiting while the shadows gather, And the sunlight fades away; While the tender gloaming deepens,

And the golden turns to gray. Watching while the starlight quivers Brightly in the heaven above; I am waiting for her coming, Waiting, watching for my love.

Listening for the well-known footfall, And the voice whose loving tone Sweetly bids me cease my waiting, Watching, listening for my own. Mingering still among the shadows,

As they deepen on the beach; earts exchange in sacred stillness Thoughts that would be soiled by speech Thus in perfect love and trusting, Winged moments pass away;

Sweet to us as golden day. And as tenderly the gloaming Gathered on the brow of day, God shall keep her, God shall bless her, When Life's golden turns to gray.

Here she renained for a short time and was then owed up the river to within two miles f Richmond, where she lay for nearly

During March, 1865, the health of he crew became impaired by the foulness of bilge water, and the midshiplin streets, the writer, in company with twelve or fifteen others, having been sent to the Naval Hospital in the city some two weeks previous. On Sunday, the 2d of April, there were anxious looks upon the faces of the nedical officers of the hospital, and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a midshipman coming in the ward to see a sick comrade, met the jeers and amused expressions of many of us because he was armed and equipped as an infantry soldier, with cartridge box and bayonet on his belt, instead of the dainty d ess-sword of the Confederate "middy." His father was an army officer, high in command, and he was greeted with such sallies as "Say, Ed. when did you change service?" "Daddy has promoted him to an army staff position." "High private in the rear rank." "How will you fix your relative rank?" "Horse marine," etc. etc. The quizzing of a gang of ill-'ed midshipmen was silenced, however, when the visitor informed us that at 2 o'clock the day before orders had been issue! for the corps to be armed as infantry and that they had been murched to the naval store-house in double-quick time and supplied with all the accourrements with which we found him. O.her rumors came in that members of the senior class and some passed midshipmen had been seen as officers in infantry marching through the streets and

This coincident, of course can easily be explained on the natural grounds, not be so explained. We would like to believe against reason that the mothes's love would be strong enough to bring back her child for that brief moment to ease the pain of death.

In Pompeil, lately, the workmen discovered in the hardened mud of new excavation, two empty spaces left by decayed and vanished bodies. Tas spaces having been filled as a mould would be with plaster, as is the usual practice, the figure of a woman with her arms outstretched to a little boy were brought to light. The child was just beyond her reach, but as the flery flood struggled for breath. It was on the flowed in upon her, she had held out night when he was so bad and when all her arms to save him -in vain. Eighteen centuries have passed since then. Every atom of that woman's form has passed from eight. Yet there is the mother's love, immortal still.

AN UNUSUAL NOISE .- Everybody nue remarked how miserable Colonel Clay Hoskins looked when he come down Austin avenue to get his morning cocktail at the 'Gently Dreaming Saloon.'

'What's the matter with you this morning?' asked his friend, Jim Ratliff. 'I didn't sleep well last night. There was an unusual noise about my house last night, and any unusual noise wakes me up, and then I can't go to sleep again. 'What was the unusual noise, colonel ?' asked Jim Ratliff. 'I'll tell you about it, Jim, but remember it is strictly confidential.

'Certainly, colonel, certainly,' 'Well, you see, my wife never scolds during the day, but she stores up all her resentment during the day, like this stored electricity, and at night she turns t loose. 'What was the unusual noise that disturbed you last night?" 'Well, you see, she began jawing

> A LUCKY BOY. -Some men begin to be lucky when they are mere boys. A twelve year-old boy shot at a cat in Leadville last week, but fotunately missed the cat and killed an influential citizen who was asleep in the back yard of a neighboring sal son. As the infl :ential citizen happened to be a delige e from Texas, who had killed several men, and of whom the Ladville police had a holy horror, the joy of the cit zens was great. The boy received a. ovation. The Mayor made a neat littl speech on presenting him with a goldmounted revolver. As the boy expresed a desire to be raised for the ministry. a fund was raised to send him to a theological institute. Nothing has, ho ever, been done for the cat.
