DISCOURSE I.

1 PETER iii. 15.

But fanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear.

ONE circumstance, in the Christian Religion, is worthy of particular notice, and ferves to diftinguish it from all other systems of Morals and Philofophy, antient or modern; and this is its directing, uniformly and invariably, the human mind to God as the fountain of all existence and bleffedness, the only legitimate object of all religious fear, adoration, and praise. This is a circumstance in favour of its divine original which has in it, great weight of evidence. And this refpect to be continually paid to the Supreme Being is, alfo, to be more than mere form, or a thing of course. It must go from the heart. Thus, in the words now read, we are called upon from the heart to pay all due respect and reverence, adoration and love, acknowledgments and praife to him. Sanctify the Lord God in your bearts.—To fanctify the Lord God in our hearts is to fear, worfhip, ferve, and obey the one true and living God, who is over all, bleffed forevermore, in whom we live, move, and have our existence.

WE are, likewife, required, in the text, at all fit feafons, and warrantable occafions to afford others who may defire it, all proper information concerning the grounds of our hope in divine mercy and forgiveness, or that we are reconciled in the temper of our hearts to the divine character, and entertain the pleafing idea that we have in truth received the glorious Salvation of the Gospel. Or the meaning may be, that we are in duty obliged, whenever a fit occasion offers, to lay before them the evidences of our belief of the gofpel as celeftial in its origin, and that the fcriptures of the Old and New-Testament are the word of God. authentic and genuine, and not the work of man's invention.-As this fame Apostle elfewhere obferves, We have alfo a more fure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. Knowing this first that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time, by the will of man : but holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Moreover-

THE reason of our hope of personal forgiveness, or our belief of revealed Religion is to be given, with meekness and fear. There ought to be great diffidence and caution left we offend God and our brethren—expose religion itself to unjust reproach —or prejudice others, who never felt its power, though admirers of its form, against it. Meckness and fear, here, stand opposed to forwardness, spiritual pride, and boassful confidence. The deceitfulness and treachery of the human heart make it proper for Christians to be always on their guard: —and always humble.

WHAT is intended, in further difcourfing upon the words before us, is to explain the duty, here prefied upon Christians :—And then to accommodate the fubject to the feason, it being the first fabbath in a new year, and to the fituation of this congregation, by recounting, in a concise manner, the very remarkable revival of Religion among us, during the year now closed.

THE duty here preffed upon Christians confists of two parts, the first is fanctifying the Lord God in our hearts; and the other is giving a reason of the hope that is in us, of an interest in the falvation of the Gospel, or of our belief of its truth, with meekness and fear.

THE first part of the duty here urged upon Christians, is fanctifying the Lord God in our hearts. And one thing implied in doing this, is acknowledging, and having a realizing fense of his being and attributes. No fervice rendered unto him, can be acceptable, or rational, but what flows from a fense that he is, and that he will reward all who diligently seek him. There must be a belief of his existence. But without faith it is impossible to please bim : for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently feek All religion begins with God. A firm belief him. that there exists at the head of the universe one great, original, defigning cause is the first principle of all religion. And this first intelligent cause is worthy of all poffible adoration and praife. He is the Creator and preferver of all worlds. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hofts of them by the breath of his mouth. He ftretched out the heavens over our heads as a curtain, and laid the foundations of the earth. He fpake and it was done. He commanded and it ftood forth. At his call the mighty frame of the created univerfe arofe into being. The heavens declare his glory, and the firmament fheweth his han-He guides all the motions of the natudy work. ral, and all the actions of the moral world. And his being must be realized in order to our fanctifying him in our hearts. He must be seen and acknowledged as the one only living and true God, who has all power, wifdom, knowledge, and goodnefs: -as exifting in, and of himfelf-independenteternal-and unchangeable.

AGAIN, the duty of fanctifying the Lord God in our hearts is making him our conftant fear. We are always to feel a reverence of him, both in his being and attributes. Hence the following exhortation in the prophecy of Ifaiah, Sanctify the Lord of bosts himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. To fanctify, applied to God, fignifies to confess and celebrate that to be holy, which in . itself was fo before. A reverential regard to him, in all his adorable excellencies, therefore, comes into the very nature of the duty of fanctifying him. We are always to treat him, his being and perfections, with all poffible reverence; and above all things elfe, to dread his anger, to all the fiercenefs of which we have exposed ourfelves on account of our fins. And fear not them, fays our bleffed Lord, which kill the body, but are not able to kill the foul, but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. It must be clear to all, that to maintain a conftant and deep reverence of God is an effential ingredient, in the duty, now under confideration. To fanctify the Lord God in cur hearts is to look up to him as infinitely holy and glorious; and in our lives, to pay a facred regard to him, in all his adorable attributes. Such therefore as treat, with difrespect, his name, his Providence, his laws, his word, his ordinances, and fabbaths do not fanctify him, in their hearts. .

It may be further observed, that the duty of fanctifying the Lord God in our hearts, is endeavouring to maintain a devotional frame of mind towards him, at all times; and whenever the stated seafons of the exercise of such a frame of heart return, actually engaging in it, with becoming fervour. If we feel that he alone is glorious in holines and the only proper object of homage and adoration, we shall be fensible of the obligations under which we, and all rational creatures are to him. Living, therefore, in the daily exercise of a devotional temper, and being ready to perform all the offices of piety, when the ftated feafons of them return, or when divine Providence calls us, is undoubtedly implied in the duty of fanclifying the Lord. Such then as live in the allowed and habitual neglect of pious and devotional exercises, cannot be faid to fanctify the Lord God in their hearts, or lives.

The duty of fanctifying God in our hearts, again, implies that we actually choose him as our portion and hope. He is, in himfelf, infinitely worthy of all poffible expressions of love, gratitude, admiration, and obedience :--- infinitely worthy to be chosen as our supreme portion. We are. perfectly fafe when we make him our help and hope. They that trust in the Lord (hall be as Mount Zion which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. He is the inexhaustible fountain of all goodness and glory. He is all-fufficient for our happiness : He has power to protect us, whatever may be our difficulties and embarrassments-wildom to guide us into right paths-mercy to pardon us, however heinous our guilt-goodness to bless us and fupply our wants, great as they may be-and grace to fubdue the corruptions of our nature. His arm is able to fave-his ear is ready to hear-and he never will leave or forfake those who choose him for their portion. His infinitely glorious attributes, indeed, render him the proper portion of the immortal mind. Sanctifying him in our hearts is choosing him as our God-our help-our dependance. The Lord is gracious and full of compaffion; flow to anger; and of great mercy: The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works. He is, confequently, infinitely worthy to be chosen as a portion. He is possified of all possible excellencies, over all, bleffed forever more. Happy, then, must all be who have chosen him for their God!

THE other part of the duty urged upon Chriftians, in the words before us, is being always ready and willing to give an answer to every man that afketh a reason of the hope that is in them, with meekness and fear.

THE hope here intended is no doubt a hope of pardoning mercy and falvation-of peace with God, or the Christian's hope. If the hope here fpoken of mean a belief of the truth of the Gofpel, yet it chiefly intends a hope of a perfonal intereft in the invaluable bleffings of the Gofpel, and the falvation which it offers. Entertaining fuch a hope, we should be willing to have others know the grounds, upon which it is built. They may, with great propriety, alk us the reason of our hope -why we allow ourfelves to expect falvation-why we truft pardon hath been extended to us. It is true that many times, others in proposing the question may have an ill and captious defign.-Where it is apparent that the question originates from improper motives, from an ill defign, or captious temper, and where there is no prospect of doing good an answer may be withholden. But whenever duty requires us to give a reason of the hope that is in us, it must be done, with meeknefs and fear; a fear left we communicate wrong ideas and impressions;—left we prejudice others against experimental godliness—and left we ourfelves, thro' the deceitfulness and treachery of our own hearts, be built up in spiritual pride. Diffidence, meekness, and caution should ever accompany our reafon of the hope that is in us. Because every thing which looks like oftentation, spiritual pride and selfconceit in religion is peculiarly odious. Whenever we undertake, consequently, to declare our hopes of divine mercy, or to state our views and selings in respect to Religion, it should be done as mentionea by the Apostle, with meckness and fear.

THE pious Pfalmist professes himself to be ready to inform all who icared God, or where there was any favorable prospect of good to be accomplished, what views and fenfe he had of divine things, Pfal. Ixvi. 16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my foul.-He made no objections against imparting to others, his fenfe of divine things, where it might be done with propriety. To open, however, your views and experience of divine things before the profane and impious, or at improper times, would be injuring the caufe of the Redeemer, and unneceffarily expofing his Religion to reproach. We have the exprefs prohibition of the glorious founder of our holy Religion on this point-Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caft ye your pearls before fwine left they trample them under their fect and turn again and rent you.

It is not only, we conceive, according to icripture, but confonant to the laws of benevolence, to impart to others when time, place and circumfances render it fit, the hope which we have of falvation, and the grounds upon which it ftands. If it be deemed altogether right to impart for the benefit of the world, important discoveries in any useful arts and sciences, why should it be thought improper to communicate the hopes of forgivenels, which we may cherifh, together with the reafons of them ? If a neighbour or an acquaintance had paffed from a state of ignorance and rude and favage manners, to much useful information and knowledge-or from deep poverty and narrow circumstances, to ease and affluence-or from a low and private station, to respectability and honour-or from extreme fickness and distress of body, to health and foundnefs would not the change be mentioned with pleafure ? Would not the event be quickly known abroad, and be celebrated by all, except the envious and malicious ? Why, then, fhould a change infinitely more important and interefling be concealed; or why fhould it be thought wrong or a mark of spiritual pride to mention it? May we not fpeak of the change, when it is fpiritual and moral-a paffing from death unto life-being turned from fin unto holinefs-being brought out of darkness into marvellous light in the Lord ?

WHENEVER a work of divine grace, through the convictive and regenerating influence of the Holy Ghost, takes place among a people, an aecount or narrative, concisely drawn up, of such a work, may fubferve many happy and important purpofes. All the praife and glory of it ought to be afcribed where due, to him, who doth all things according to the counfel of his own will : Who, as a perfect fovereign, works when, how, and where it feemeth him good. All bleffings, indeed, whether temporal or fpiritual, come from him as the overflowing fountain: Every good and perfect gift proceedeth from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness or fo much as shadow of turning. He will have mercy, on whom he will have mercy. He grants his Holy Spirit as feemeth good in his fight, to render effectual upon the hearts and confciences of people, the ministrations of the Gofpel. Whatever inftruments are honoured in accomplishing his gracious defigns, his is the power; and his fhould be all the glory.---Paul may plant and Apollos water, but he giveth the increase. When he has defigns of good for individuals or a congregation of his people, or fpiritual bleffings to impart, he will employ fuch means as, in his fovereign will, are agreeable to his infinite wifdom.

To lay before the mind a just and faithful narrative of a work of God's Holy Spirit in bringing the careless and hardened finner to attend to his falvation, with all ferious falvation and to embrace cordially the glorious Redeemer :--Or when many-very confiderable numbers are thus affected by a general attention, must redound greatly to the honour of religion;--is a delightful proof of the truth of the Gospel;--is a clear display of its power ;---must enliven the zeal of pious Chrik tians-animate their affections-bring them to the throne of grace in fervent prayers and praifes-be the occafion of thankfgivings unto God from many ;--- and of the advancement of his glory. The many valuable purpofes, therefore, which may be answered by such an ACCOUNT are a sufficient reafon, why it ought not to be omitted. A congregation of worfhipping Christians ought carefully to notice all divine Providences to them. If afflictive, to be humble under them. If profperous, to be thankful for them. If general health have been enjoyed by them, while other places have been vifited with wasting fickness and great mortality, it ought not to be forgotten. The more important likewife the bleffings conferred, the higher do the obligations of gratitude rife, and the more need to be duly appreciated. Temporal mercies, important and great as they may be, are not to be compared to fpiritual.

There are, likewife, times and feafons peculiarly fitted for the purpole of directing the minds of a whole congregation to the fpecial operations of God's Providence or grace. Such are the prefent feafon and occafion. We are now entered upon another year of our lives. This being the first fabbath in it, a brief recapitulation of the chief mercies of God to you, the year now closed, may teach —awaken—quicken—and imprefs you.—Upon a retrospective view of the many favours of God, both temporal and spiritual to us, we may well addrefs our fouls, as the pious Pfalmist doth, in the following words—Blefs the Lord O my foul : and all that is within me, blefs his holy name : Blefs the Lord O my foul, and forget not all his benefits.

EVERY thing indeed which may be conducive to the good of fouls, in a fpiritual fenfe, or tend to promote the interest and credit of the Redeemer's kingdom, or to advance the caufe of piety and morality, ought to meet the wifhes of the friends of Zion. Most ungrateful and base would a people be to forget the work of divine grace, in calling up their attention to things heavenly, through the ministrations of the SANCTUARY. In truth, the preaching of the doctrines of religion, in their purity and with plainnefs, is the most powerful mean of building up the peace and happiness of mankind :---Of this you would have a full conviction, were you to be eye-witneffes of the ftriking difference, between a people who enjoy, and those who do not enjoy, the advantages and light of the Christian dispensation .- We may, indeed, well weep in the fadness of our hearts, that fo many, who fit under the light of the glorious Gospel, are fo hardened in impenitence and wilful neglect of duty.-But for our encouragement, may we not conclude that, wherever the means of grace are granted, or the truths of Christianity are justly and clearly exhibited, there they are more or lefs profpered. The visible fuccess attending them is frequently next to nothing : The feed fown feems to perish in the earth-God's ministring fervants feem to labour in vain, and spend their strength for nought.-They take up this heart-rending lamentation. Lord who hath believed our report, or 'swhom is the arm of the Lord revealed ! They cry out, often, with the prophet Jeremiah, who was greatly discouraged by his want of fuccess-O that mine bead were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the flain of the daughter of my people ! But neverthelefs, even, in times of general deadness and inattention as to religion, there may be many, on whofe hearts, though unknown to all around them, the Gofpel difpenfed may have its defired effect. For the faithful difpenfation of the Gospel is at all times more or lefs fuccefsful. Some are awakened, though they never difclofe their feelings to their nearest friends .---Some are convinced of their danger from fin, and groan in fecret. Some are favingly enlightened, and experience the renewing power of the Holy Ghoft, though they dare not admit a hope of their interest in the atoning blood of a precious Redeemer. Others are edified, confirmed, and comforted : are enabled to give a reafon of the hope that is in them with meekness and fear.

But at fome peculiarly happy feafons never to be forgotten, but to be remembered with admiring joy, and adoring thankfulnefs, it pleafes a gracious and merciful God, in the riches of his goodnefs, to bow the heavens and come down by his Holy Spirit to a congregation. He clothes the means of grace with wonderful power. A fpirit of prayer is given, in a furprifing manner: Heavenly dews foftly defcend, and enliven the fields of Zion.—Nay, mighty showers of grace are poured out. The Father of mercies, a sovereign God, opens his treasures of awakening, convincing, and renewing influence; caufing it to rain on one city and not on another, and who fays, I will pour water upon him that is thirfty and floods upon the dry ground : I will pour my (pirit upon thy feed, and my bleffings upon thine offspring. And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courfes. One shall fay I am the Lord's, and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his own hand unto the Lord, and furname himself by the name of Ifrael .--God's word is as a fire to melt, and a hammer to break the rock in pieces. The peculiar and difcriminating doctrines of the Gospel, when the influence of the Holy Spirit accompanies them, have a wonderful force. For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing afunder of foul and fpirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

SUCH as never had the happinels to fee, among a people, a general attention to Religion, or to be witneffes of a revival of it, can hardly realife the aftonifhing alteration which it makes, or have any very adequate idea of it. They will, with difficulty, be led to conceive it poffible, that the Gofpel, in its ministrations, should be fo powerful. We find, alfo, fome who have the diffinguished lot of being in the midft of fuch a scene, wholly neglect, either through conceit of their own rank in sciety, or pretended multiplicity, importance, and crowding nature of worldly business, or mere flothfulnefs, to fee it, or cooly and candidly examine the fact. A few, moreover, either actually do, or affect to difbelieve the whole, imputing what is uneither to enthusiasm-sympathy-the common, power of imagination-or to strains of pathetic eloquence, in the Minister of the Gospel, or to subjects of terror fet before the mind, in glowing language-or the operation of animal affections, or fome other equally inadequate caufe. Such will not come and fee. They keep at a diftance from every thing of this kind. If they would lay afide all prejudice, and carefully examine for themfelves. they would foon be fatisfied. But the misfortune is that fuch are their prejudices, or perverse fentiments, that they cannot endure the thought of feeing or hearing any thing like experimental Reli-Unhappy is it for themfelves, for fociety gion. and for real piety that they have imbibed the notion, that all Religion confifts only in mere external observances, and a life visibly moral and decent. While actuated by these views and sentiments, they will, of course, be implacable enemies to a revival of Religion, or a work of conviction and conversion. If any who hear me, have any doubts about the reality of fuch a work, a ferious and diligent perusal of the scriptures, and a candid and patient examination of the nature of the Gospel, would, it is apprehended, entirely remove them. Let the following accounts, on divine record, be here well weighed, of feveral inftances. of the wonderful power of a preached word, in different places. Upon critically examining these, penned by infpiration, we shall see a striking coincidence with all genuine revivals of Religion, at any time, and among any people, in any part of the Christian world.—For it is the same grace of God which renders the Gospel successful in one age, place, and heart equally as another.

IN SAMARIA, we have a narrative of a work of divine grace, where the glorious Gofpel preached by Philip, an evangelift, was rendered effectual, by the effusions of the Holy Spirit. A Christian church was there gathered.-When a furious perfecution was commenced against the church in Jerufalem, Philip went down to Samaria, and preached the Gofpel. The people heard the word with great joy, and spared no pains to be, where it was to be fpoken. They were all attention to it; folicitous to learn the way of falvation and life. By the convictive operations of the Holy Ghoft they were brought under awakenings. Their religious imprefions greatly affected them, and terminated, in many cafes, happily. The effects evidenced the reality of their faith and repentance. We are told that many believed the Gofpel; and were added to the church-and received the holy facrament of baptism. Acts viii. 5-8. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Chrift unto them. And the people with one accord gave beed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which be did. And there was great joy in that city.-But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of

Jefus Christ, they were baptifed, both men and wemen.

AT ANTIOCH, likewife, the word preached was remarkably fucceeded by the awakening and renewing power of God's Holy Spirit. The Ministers of the Gospel, who carried the good news of pardon and life to that place, found mercy to be fuc-The people were deeply attentive. cefsful. Many. after an anxious folicitude about their everlasting falvation, were made the fubjects of the renewing grace of God. In confequence of their cordially embracing the Gofpel, they took upon themfelves," a public profession of religion-joined the church -and received Christian baptism. Acts xi. 21-25. And the hand of the Lord was with them, the Minifters of the Gofpel, and a GREAT NUMBER believed and turned unto the Lord. Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church in Jerusalem. And they fent forth Barnabas that he should go as far as Antioch. Who when he was come, and had feen the grace of God, was glad; and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For be was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghoft and of faith ; and much people were added unto the Lord. A large acceffion was made to the church. Such as entertained a hope that they had been brought from fin to holinefs, and been the fubjects of a work of the fanctification of the Holy Ghost, made a profeffion of Religion, joined the church, and received the holy ordinances. But the word of God grew' and prevailed. The people were all earnestness and engagedness to hear the word. They were deeply affected with it. By the concurring influence of grace, the truths fpoken were fuccefsful on the heart. Sifter-churches partook in the joy. The pious labors of God's ministring fervants were owned. What is worthy of particular notice here is that there was apparently no open opposition to the power and prevalence of the Gospel, in either of these places. But, on the contrary, great fatisfaction and pleasure. The people were, cheerfully and harmoniously, attentive to the preaching of the word, and greatly rejoiced to behold its benign effect on the heart and life. For a reformation of morals always attends a revival of religion. And there was great joy in that city.

AT THESSALONICA, the preaching of Paul and Silas was remarkably bleffed by the attending influence of the Holy Ghost, though a most unreasonable and violent opposition was raised, by base and lewd men, against the Religion of Christ, and his Ministers-against the Gospel, and its obtaining credit and power among any of the people. But man, however inimical to the peculiar doctrines of the Gofpel, cannot ftop their progress, or prevent others from feeling their force. For notwithstanding the violent enmity against the Religion of Jefus, many of both fexes, and among the most respect, able, were exceedingly attentive, became deeply impressed with a fense of divine things-hopefully obtained pardon-and were the happy fubjects of a work of fanctification on the heart. Acts xvii. 1-5. Now when they had paffed through Amphipolis. and Apallonia, they came to Thessalonica where was a fynagogue of the Jews. And Paul; as his manner was, went in unto them, and three fabbath days reafened with them out of the foriptures. Opening and alledging that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead : and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ. And some of them believed and conforted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a GREAT multitude, and of the chief women NOT A FEW.

AT BEREA, a fimilar attention to Religion is related in the facred pages. The fame Gofpel was efficacious-the fame God adored-the fame Saviour received-and the fame profession of faith made. The most respectable people of that place heard the word with joy. Such, too, as were careful to attend upon the preaching of the word, and the feafons and opportunities devoted to religious worfhip, were greatly moved; and many of them effectually called. But fuch, as either wholly neglected, or openly opposed the work, were left of God, in his righteous and fovereign Providence, to remain stupid and hardened in fin, impenitence, and unbelief. It is particularly noticed of the converts at Berea, that they manifested the genuineness of the work, by a diligent and faithful perufal of the holy fcriptures. And in all places, where it has pleafed a gracious and merciful God, to excite, by his fpirit, any uncommon attention to Religion, an abundant reading of the infpired volume, and conflancy and engagedness of mind, in waiting upon, God in all his inftituted means of religious inftruc. tion, are equally observable. Acts xvii. 10, 11, 12,

And the brethren immediately fent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea, who coming thither went into a synagogue of the Jews. These were more noble than those of Theffalonica in that they received the word with all readiness, and fearched the scriptures daily whether those things were so. Therefore MANY of them believed, alfo of honourable women which were Greeks, and of MEN NOT A FEW.

But the hiftorian informs us, that the enemies of the work at Theffalonica, were not contented with abufing, infulting, and belying the Preachers of the Gospel, at home; but, to such extreme lengths did their malice carry them, that they went to Berea, and exerted themfelves all in their power to put a ftop to the work there. How preposterous their zeal against the Gospel! and by what a mad perfecuting fpirit were they actuated !

AT CORINTH, a most furious opposition showed itself, against the regular Ministers of Christ for preaching the plain, and powerful doctrines of the Gospel. The enemies of Religion always manifest their malice against God and Christ, by fingling out his Ministers as the objects of their implacable rage. No falfhoods are too grofs for them to attempt to fpread, nor hatred too deadly for them to exercife. But mighty is the power of Gospeltruth : its glorious doctrines will have an effect on the heart. Even in Corinth, though fo many opposed and blasphemed, still NUMBERS believed : were convinced of the danger and guilt of fin : and were brought to a faving knowledge of God in Christ. In consequence of a hopeful change of heart by regenerating grace, they joined the church, by a public profession of Religion; and received the holy facrament of baptism. Acts xviii. 8. And Cri/pus the chief ruler of the fynagogue believed on the Lord with all his bouse: and MANT of the Corinthians, bearing, believed, and were baptized.

WE have the following narrative of a work of God's Holy Spirit at EPHESUS. The preaching of the Gospel, in that place, was remarkably bleffed. Many were visited with awakenings and convictions. And were favingly wrought upon by divine grace. As the natural and neceffary effect, they forfook their idolatrous and evil practices. They made an open confession of their scandalous crimes, and fhameful deeds, in following the magical art. They PUBLICLY professed their faith in Christ. The Gofpel preached had the fame benign influence upon them, as it has in all ages and places where the divine spirit is poured out in his awakening and renewing power. But an opposition arose, here, Idolaters, and fuch as acquired a living or alfo. gain from idolatrous practices, fet themfelves to oppofe the Gospel, by reviling its Ministers, the usual refort of all envious and wicked enemies to the Gospel itself, and its divine Author. Acts xix. 17, 18, 19, 20. And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks alfo dwelling at Ephefus, and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jefus was magnified. And MANY that believed, came and confeffed, and shewed their deeds. MANY also of them which ufed curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men : and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of filver. So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

In these several accounts of a work of divine grace, in scripture, in different places, a great uniformity, in the effects of the work, and the manner of it, is very observable. And those scripturenarratives, I have very briefly rehearsed, to show the importance, as well as nature of a work of God's Holy Spirit, among a people; and to justify the giving an account of fuch a work wherever it may, in the infinite goodness of God, be granted. Facts are of the highest confequence to mankind in teaching them the real nature of religion. If we would learn the nature of any thing, in the clearest manner, we must go where that nature is acted out. A defire to know what effect the Gospel has upon others is very commendable. And how great the coincidence is between the work of grace to be related, in the fequel, and the above fcripture-accounts, must be left to the candid hearer to judge.

DISCOURSE IL

I PETER ill. 15.

BUT fanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the bope that is in you with meekness and fear.

IN difcourfing upon these words it was proposed to explain the duty here prefied upon Christians—and then to accommodate the subject to the season and the fituation of this Congregation, by recounting, in a concise manner, the very remarkable revival of Religion among us, during the year now closed.

THE duty here preffed upon Christians, it was observed, confisted of two parts, Sanctifying the Lord God in our hearts; and giving an answer to such as defire a reason of the hope that is in us of pardon and falvation, with meekness and fear. After explaining the duty, the way is prepared to attend to the main defign in view, to give you some general account of the work of divine grace, in this congregation, the feason past.

THREE remarks respecting this work tending to place it, in a true light, should be here made.

THE first is, the very great uniformity in the views, feelings, and impreffions of those, who have been the fubjects of it. This is no flight evidence of its being a real and genuine work of the grace of God. For if true Religion be the fame in all who posses it : If the human heart, in its natural ftate, be equally depraved in all : If the gospel be the fame in its defign and power : If its doctrines be the fame at all times; and if God's Holy Spirit be the fame in his operations, this confequence must neceffarily follow that the views, feelings, and impreffions both under religious awakenings, and those convictions which commonly precede renovation, and in conversion will be uniform, or very fimilar. They will indeed be in kind, though not in degree, exactly alike. Differing in many circumstances, they will be fubstantially the fame. A very great uniformity has been observable, which is a proof that the work is not apocryphal. If it had been the effect merely of enthufiafm, or of a heated imagination, it is not at all probable there would have been fuch an uniformity.

ANOTHER remarkable circumstance attending the work is its great regularity. The whole progress of it, from the first commencement of it until the present day, has been distinguished by order, peace, union, and fedateness. There have been no divisions, herefies, envyings, contentions, separations, visions, trances, and impulses. No hard judging, rash centoriousness, and uncharitablenefs. All, who were under ferious concern about their falvation, even when most deeply affected, manifested no disposition to have others see and know their diffrefs, though very often fo great as almost to overwhelm them. We had no outcries, falling down-or bodily agitations. Such things often, through the temptations of a fubtle adverfary, mingle with, and difgrace revivals of religion, and lead others to oppose and condemn the whole, making no diferiminations between the precious metal and the drofs. Things of this nature when found attending any uncommon ferioufnefs, are to be lamented, but ought not to induce us to reject or discredit the whole. Many wife and eminent Divines and Christians faw fo much fanaticism, diforder, divisions, and bodily affections, in the extraordinary work, in this land, in the years 1741-42 as to lead them to condemn and reject the whole as mere delusion and enthusiasm. But, it is believed, that even the most uncandid and infidel mind, if an actual witnefs, could not point out one inftance in the prefent cafe of what might, with any propriety, be termed enthusiasm. Through ignorance of the nature of Religion, and becaufe they will not fairly fee and examine, the enemies of God and the Gofpel, it is well known, call all ferious and real piety by the opprobious names of fanaticifm and fuper-Such as never felt any cordial efteem for flition. vital piety, ufually, are not wanting in attempts to load it, with contempt and fcorn. The work of God's Holy Spirit, among us, has been exceedingly regular; It has been all of a piece : One continued unfolding of the power of truth : A difplay of the efficacy of the peculiar and diffinguishing doctrines of the glorious Gofpel : Chrift has feemed to come forth in the riches of his grace : To ride in the chariots of falvation : His word has been powerful indeed. O what attention ! what folemnity ! In what glory and majefty did Chrift appear ! Behold, fays the prophet Malachi speaking of the majefty and grace of Christ, I will fend my meffenger, and he shall prepare the way before me : and the Lord whom ye fick, shall fuddenly come to his temple ; even the meffenger of his covenant whom ye delight in : Behold, he shall come, suith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming ? and who fball ftand when he appeareth? For he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. And he shall fit as a refiner and purifier of filver; and he fhall purify the fons of Levi, and purge them as gold and fiver, that they may off r unto the Lord an offering in rightcoufnefs. Then Shall the offering of Juduhand Jerufalem be pleafant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.

THE only further remark here neceffary in order to give a just representation of the work, is the vifibly good fruits and beneficial tendency of it already exhibited; and which will, no doubt, more and more appear. No religion is of any worth or can be genuine, which does not mend the heart, and reform the life. The tree is known to be good, in the world of nature, by the good fruit which it bears. The beauty of holines is its tendency to happines, and the glory of religion is the bleffed effect which it has on the heart and life. It is good as it does good-makes better men-better citizens-a happier world. It does good in this world, as well as prepares for felicity in the next. If the Gospel have been received as it ought to be, by any of the children of men, there will be a vifible alteration in the life, the general deportment. Morality, indeed, is built upon religion as its only fure and folid foundation. No real piety of heart can exist, of course, without moral virtue. Justice, temperance, fobriety, and all the amiable train of moral virtues flow from the fear of God : From faith and repentance. If we fear God, we shall keep his commandments. If we love him, we shall be truly benevolent towards man. If we love Chrift and believe in him we fhall follow his example, and imitate him, in meekness and humility. If we have holinefs of heart, there will most certainly be holinefs of life. If we have religion in the heart, it will show itself in a well-ordered converfation. We are created anew in Chrift Jefus unto good works, which were before ordained that we should walk in them. This is a faithful faying, and I will that thou constantly affirm, that they which bave believed in God, be careful to maintain good works, for these are good and profitable unto men. The fruit of holinefs will always be found, where there is the implantation of the principle. A reformation in morals among a people is the only proof, upon which any manner of dependence either can, or ought to be placed, of a real work of grace. And the outward reformation here in those who have been affected, has been in proportion to the work of God's Holy Spirit. Vice is avoided by them as odious.--Virtue is revered as amiable. Evil practices are fhunned. Charity, kindnefs, condescention, and a forgiving temper are nourifhed. Slander and backbiting disesteemed. Rioting, diffipation, and vicious amusements are not seen. Profanenels, one of the crying fins of the land, and on account of which the land mourneth is greatly difcountenanced and suppressed. Peace, union, Christian harmony and friendship obtain. Envy, malice, and hatred in a good degree have difappeared. The holy fcriptures are more generally efteemed, and abundantly read. Public worfhip and divine ordinances are more highly venerated, and exemplarily attended. Knowledge in religion has been furprizingly increased and diffused. Prayer, both private and focial, is fet up and constantly performed.-How many more praying individuals, and praying families! The morning and evening facrifice, oh how delightful the idea, ascends to the throne of the universe, to a prayer-hearing God, from many a heart and house, where heretofore nothing of the kind was known. Divine and precious ordinances are both honoured and devoutly folemnized. The gospel is not only admired and revered, but openly professed. A general seriousnefs, visible to every eye, has been spread over the congregation. How are morality and virtue efteemed, loved, and purfued! How is fin mourned over, as the fource of all our miseries, rendering us loathfome to a holy God ! How is a Saviour's name adored, and falvation fought!-What deep attention in God's house ! What defire and readinefs to hear divine truths! How much more valued are moral and religious instructions and institutions? Such outward reformation clearly difcovers the genuineness of the work. Can the effect exist without the cause ?--- Can plenteous streams flow, where there is no fountain? As proofs of the good effects of this work of grace, a regard to, and fanctification of the holy fabbath, and an affectionate love to, and folemnization of the facraments of the Gofpel, have been mentioned. And they have been mentioned, becaufe a denial of the fabbathof stated prayer-of the holy ordinances-and of the ministry of the word is confidered by the most judicious and knowing Christians, as a real denial of all religion, and a full evidence of a deftitution of its principles.

In the course of the work of grace among us, a very becoming and steady zeal has been manifested to all gospel inftitutions. Since the commencement of the feriousness, above ninety have received the ordinance of Christian baptifm; and many of them Parents, as well as children, have received adults. that facrament, fo plainly inftituted by the glorious Saviour, and fo constantly administered by the Apostles, under infpiration, to their converts as the initiatory ordinance-as we have feen, in the accounts which are given us, of the revival of religion, in fundry places, briefly recited in the former discourse. How affecting to see parents first offering themfelves, and then their households, after the fcripture-pattern, at the altar, to receive Chriftian baptism ! The accession to the communion of the church has been very great. One hundred and eight, fince the commencement of this uncommon attention to religion, have joined themfelves to the Lord, by a public profession. And a number more propose foon, by the leave of Providence, to manifest, in the fame public manner, their regard to Christ and his precious ordinances. Such are some of the visible fruits of this work of grace already exhibited. And such the reformation which is its refult.

ONE would be ready to conclude, that all hearers would be pleased, though from different motives, with a recital of the principal facts which have characterifed this mighty influence of the Gofpel upon the heart and confcience. Those who love a Redeemer's name, and to whom his falvation is dear, will feel the warmest emotions of fervent gratitude to God, as the all-wife disposer of events, the fountain of grace and glory. Thofe whole hearts have been deeply affected will weep with joy, at the retrospective view of what they have both feen and felt. Such as have no more than an outward respect for the Gospel, and have been accustomed to look up to Religion, as an honoured and revered name, will receive new impreffions in its favour, it may be hoped. Such as are enemies to, and difbelievers in the power of godliness will see clear evidence of the truth of the Golpel, and of the efficacy of free lovereign grace. Facts will be stated, with fairness and candor; and under a conviction that it is more eligible to come fhort, than to exceed in the detail. For falle zeal is never productive of good, but often of milchievous effects. Hear, therefore, and judge for yourfelves.

It is now nearly a century, fince the first fettlements were made in this place. Invited by the pleafantnefs of the fituation and fertility of the foil, worthy and respectable families from the town fixed there refidence here. The first inhabitants lived feveral years, without enjoying the flated ministrations of the Gospel, because not numerous enough to be able to bear the expense of its decent fupport. They, accordingly, attended public worfhip on Lord's day, as often as convenience admitted, in the town from which they had recently removed. A church confifting of twenty-nine members was gathered fome time antecedent to the ordination of a stated Minister of the Gospel, in faid church. After a fuitable length of time to be well fatisfied of his qualifications for the evangelical ministry, they chose the Rev. BENJAMIN COLTON for their Pastor. On the 24th of February 1713, he was folemnly fet apart, by ordination, to the work of the Christian Ministry over them. He laboured in word and doctrine for the fpace of fortyfour years. Being unable any longer on account of the weight of years, and infirmities of body to perform the arduous duties of his facred office, after making trial of feveral candidates for the Gofpel ministry, the eyes of the people were, at length, fixed on the Rev. NATHANIEL HOOKER, who was ordained over the church and congregation December 21, 1757. The Rev. Mr. COLTON died March 1, 1759. And the Rev. Mr. HOOK-ER eleven years after, June 11, 1770. He was called off from his work in the prime and flower of life. His popular talents endeared him to his people, and his literary tafte made him agreeable to his acquaintance.

In the year 1745, in the time of the great revival of Religion in New-England, and various other parts, in the term of one year, forty-two were added to the church, thirty-fix of whom were females. This was under the ministry of the first Pastor. The irregularities and enthusias of that truly wonderful day offended many, and brought a reproach on the work. But it would be uncharitable to condemn the whole, becaufe there were impure mixtures. The next largest number added to the communion of the church, in one year, was eleven: This was in 1763, under the ministry of my immediate predeceffor. And fince my ministry commenced among you, before this year, the largeft number added to the communion of the church. in one year, was fixteen, which was in the year 1781. The average number of admissions to the communion of the church, for ninety years, is five, and a little above. Since the first embodying of the church the aggregate fum of admissions into communion has been four hundred fixty-eight, before the prefent extraordinary attention to Religion began here. And fince this, the admissions have been one hundred and eight; and it is expected feveral more will foon come forward, and manifest their regard to religion, by a public profession. After a due time for close felf-examination, and eftablishment in the ways of God, such as have obtained a hope of reconciliation to the divine character, and of a cordial reception of the falvation of the Gofpel, have expressed an earnest defire to honour God and divine ordinances, by a public profession of their faith. The admissions into communion, fince this feafon of religious attention, have been almost one fourth part of the number of admissions, for ninety years. The whole number of admissions, during the ministry of the Rev. Mr. COLTON, which was forty-four years of active fervice, was two hundred and fixty-three. During the ministry of the Rev. Mr. HOOKER, which was thirteen years, the admiffions were fixty-five-And fince my pastoral relation to you, for twentyfix years, the admiffions exclusive of the past year have been one hundred and forty-and as above stated, one hundred and eight, within the compass of one year past.

IT may be useful to add here, that the deaths or funerals, for ninety years, which is the length of time this people have been an ecclefiastical society, according to the laws of the state, are one thousand: The baptisms two thousand: The admissions five hundred and seventy fix. There have been more than half as many admissions as deaths.—At a medium, the admissions have been five, before this season of religious attention; the deaths eleven; and the baptisms twenty. The general state of religion, it hence appears, for ninety years, has been nearly the fame, except in the time of the general feriousnels in the country in 1741. The statement above made, and I believe it is correct, ferves to evince the importance of the past featon: For the admiffions into the communion of the church have been equal, according to this statement, to twentytwo years, upon an average, for ninety years together. If we allow as much fincerity in thefe, as in former admissions, and charity cannot forbear to allow, at least, as much, we shall have a very favorable opinion of the work of the Lord, and feel what a delightful occafion we have of pious gratie It is, most certainly, a pleasing and profitatude. ble reflection to think, that when you look back upon your own history, fince you were first a people, that the admiffions into the communion of the church have been more than half as many as the deaths. This is not what I should, by any means, have imagined until actual enumeration. And the fact may befides answer the valuable purpose of enlarging our charity. The above sketch of your own hiftory, in regard to religion, must be interefting to you all, efpecially to the rifing generation. No hearer, it is presumed, however judicious, could have formed any correct idea of the proportion between the deaths, admiffions, and baptisms, without an actual computation, from authentic re-This view, also, gives some useful informacords. tion concerning the state of religion, and beneficial and happy effects of the ministrations of the Gof-pel; as well as interesting lessons concerning human nature.

THERE never has been before the prefent any very great revival of religion here fince the first gathering of the church. Some years and feafons, indeed, there has been more attention or regard to it, than others.—Such a year as the past this people never faw. And probably never will, while any of us now before God, in his house of prayer. are living. O that we might fee many fuch happy revolving years !-- Few congregations are ever fo highly favored as to experience fuch a day of divine grace and the mighty power of the Gofpel. Few perfons ever have the happiness to live in such a day; or to be witneffes of fuch a fcene. But bleff. ed are our eyes for they have feen, and our ears for they have heard! Praile ye the Lord !- Let us lift up our hands in the fanctuary, and blefs the name of the Lord !

THE past year has, likewise, been distinguished for a fimilar work of grace, in many places around us-and in various other parts of the United States. The Holy Spirit has been vouchfafed, in an unufual manner, to accompany and blefs the means of grace.—The heavenly dews of divine influence have fallen, like the natural rain on grass, newly mown.—The prayers of the friends of piety, for success to the preached word, have been remarkably answered. Multitudes and multitudes, a goodly number, have been gathered into the family and kingdom of Christ. Upon Zion a glory hath shined. The walls of Jerusalem have been built up, Saints have been quickened and refreshed. Sinners have been converted. God has been glorified. Here the blafpheming atheift has been brought to adore and love that God, whofe very being he had before denied. There the fcoffing infidel has bowed to that divine Redeemer, whom before he had utterly renounced, and has placed his hopes of pardon and falvation in that atoning blood, that peacemaking and life-giving blood which he had before reproached, with cruel malice. Here the vifionary denier of the penalty of the divine law, and the punishment of the incorrigibly wicked in another life, has hastened to renounce his errors, and trembled left his fins fhould bring him into that place of torment, which before he had viewed as the vain dream of superstition. There the profane, impious abandoned transgreffor, hardened in vice, a professed contemner of things facred, has been brought to admire, delight in, and receive that Gofpel, of which he had, all his life, made light. Such characters, feemingly the furthest off from all mercy, have felt the power of quickening grace, and exclaimed in wonder and gratitude, "Salvation O the joyful found ! O for a thousand tongues to speak the Redeemer's praifes !"

For feveral years paft, errors and herefies have prevailed, in the United States, to an aftonifhing degree; owing, no doubt to a variety of caufes, and among others to the corruption of morals during our revolutionary war; and to the amazing fcenes unfolded on the theatre of Europe; and to the number of loofe, infidel, and atheiftical publications fcattered over this country, in its whole length and breadth, by the votaries of MODERN PHILOSOPHY, and the NEW THEORIES of Liberty and Equality. Piety feemed to be flying away from our land—Religion declined—morality lanquifhed —vice grew bold—profanenefs, revelling, difhonefty and finful amufements rapidly increafed—univerfalifm—infidelity—atheifm—fcoffing at all ferious godlinefs—contempt of the holy fabbath—defertion of public worfhip—omiffion of family-religion—and difregard of divine ordinances have fpread, in a degree, which call for tears of grief, threatening, in their progrefs, to lay wafte all the moft valuable interefts of fociety.

The people of this congregation did not wholly escape the widely diffusing contagion. Since my pastoral connection with you, you have been noted for order, peace, good agreement, among yourfelves, and general attendance on the public worfhip of the Deity. A few individuals excepted, all were fleady and exemplary in fo important a duty. Dangers have here however threatened the interest of religion. Endeavours have not been wanting to caft an odium upon it by an open and avowed denial of the fabbath-ftated public worfhip-ftated family-prayer-holy ordinances-regeneration by the power of fovereign grace-faith in a crucified Redeemer-justification through his righteouf. nefs-free pardon-and the fcriptures of the Old and New-Teftament, as the PRIMARY rule and only standard of belief and practice. There have been for feveral years it must be owned, a general cold-hefs, deadnefs, and inattention to the Gofpel.— There appeared to be lefs regard to vital practical godlinefs than common, for fometime; and the admiffions into the communion were no more than five, for the whole of the four paft years.—It feemed as if God had almost intirely withdrawn his gracious influence. We were left to mourn an abfent God—barren ordinances—unfuccefsful Gofpel—and cold hearts. The visible attendance neverthelefs on public worship had not very greatly declined, during this space.

In the close of the month of March, and beginning of the month of April last, some hopeful fymptoms of a greater regard to Religion, among a few individuals, seemed to be manifested. Here, and there, one, began to enquire, Is there any thing in religion, befides the external forms? Is not vital experimental godliness fomething more than merepretence. The small beginnings grew more and more, from day to day. A great proportion of the people began to awake, as it were, into a spirit of enquiry and thoughtfulnefs. The appearance of the congregation was noticed, and instructions adapted to it were every fabbath attempted. Such fubjects were chosen as were deemed most proper, and treated in a manner that would probably be affecting .- In this fituation were things, for about three weeks. It was then judged expedient, fuch was the ear to hear, and fo eager the defire to attend, to institute special religious meetings. This measure was adopted, after much deliberation and prayerful anxiety, becaufe it was of fuch a nature as would draw forth public attention, and occafion censure and reprehension from such as might be, in any degree, prejudiced against what is, usually, termed a revival of religion. These special religious meetings became indifpenfably neceffary to prevent enthusialm and diforder; and were attended beyond expectation. An air of thoughtfulnefs and deep concern was very visible to every one prefent. Through the influence of God's holy fpirit, a ferious enquiry " what shall I do to be faved" was among us. The fpecial religious meetings were, more and more, crouded. They were folemn and impreflive. Such as attended at first, out of idle curiofity, either foon left them, or were affected too deeply to help liftening with careful attention. The people who reforted to these religious meetings, and there were in various parts of the fociety, five of them, in a week, became more and more anxious to hear the Gofpel difpenfed, and to know their duty. To the word fpoken, and prayers offered, they listened with eager attention, often bathed in flowing tears from beginning to end. Such fubjects were chosen, and discoursed upon as were best calculated to place truth before the mind, in the most engaging and affecting light. The object in view, in these discourses, altogether was to imprefs truth upon the mind-to lay all' the grand and peculiar doctrines of Christ in their proper order, connexion, and extent before the hearer, and in all their weight and importance. The wifh was to make them fee, know, and understand the truth ; and not to move the animal affections, or natural paffions of the foul: For a religion made up of the natural affections of the foul is of no worth, but often extremely dangerous.-Subjects of terror were infrequently fought; and when treated, were not dreffed up in language calculated to terrify. Divine awakening influence, in a furprizing degree, accompanied the means of grace. The Holy Spirit, in his convictive power was evidently poured out, in plentiful effusions. Confcience was roused, and deep. impressions of a religious nature made on many. Often forty or fifty would be most deeply affected ; and be all in tears, during the religious exercises; and feemed as if they could not bear to have them ended. The conviction's of many [the word is here used to denote the concern and anguish of the foul before the renovation of the heart] were deep and awful. They were bowed down under the weight of them. They wept plentifully under a fense of their fins of heart, thought and life :--and their exposedness, in consequence of their fins, to everlasting ruin. With God was terrible majef. They feemed to be overwhelmed with anguish ty. -ready to fink under their fense of their fins. Destruction from the Lord was a terror to them. They trembled at the wrath of God due to them. Their anguish of conscience-their anxiety-their diftrefs were great beyond words to defcribe. They were crying out, "What shall I do to be faved ? Where shall I look for help? How escape the mifery I deferve ?"--Here it may be useful concilely to ftate the progress of the work of conviction, or the points to which, in general, the fubjects of it, were brought. For though their convictions were different in degree, in duration, and terror, yet they were alike in fubftance.

THE first thing of which they were convinced, was that they were guilty finners before God; that their hearts were a fountain of evil; that their lives, though in the eye of the world free from blame, were one continued feries of fin and rebellion. Numberles fins came to the mind's view, which before were either forgotten, or deemed no fins. Before being awakened they had no idea of their finful and perifhing state. It feemed strange to them that any could be fourconcerned about their fins heretofore.

AGAIN, they were convinced of the being and Formerly they did not realize attributes of God. his existence and perfections. He was not in all their thoughts. They fcarcely turned one thought towards him. But passed on in life, from week to week, and year to year, stupid and heedles. The wicked through the pride of his heart will not feek after God. He feems not to be prefent .--- He is regarded no more than though he did not exist. But now duties omitted, a God forgotten, religion neglected, a Saviour difregarded, a Gofpel flighted, falvation unfought, feafons and opportunities of grace unattended, time milimproved, talents misapplied, calls of mercy unheeded are reflected upon, with horror and amazement. Now a God, whofe being all creation proclaimed, a God poffeffed of all poffible excellencies-infinitely holy, just, omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent, whom they had never loved, feared, or obeyed and to whom their final account must be rendered arole to the mind's view, and produced diffress in expreffible.

FURTHER, under their awakenings, they faw likewife that a holy law righteoufly condemned them. They felt at the fame time condemned by reason. Conscience continually upbraided them. Their hearts were full of opposition to this law, in the violation of which they had always lived. They could not bear to think of its strictness and penalty. They hated the law becaufe fo ftrict a rule of life, demanding fo much of them; and its penalty, becaufe fo fevere a punifhment was threatened to all disobedience or want of conformity. They had frequent rifings of heart not only against God, and the Redeemer, but against the law and Gospel, and all the ways of religion, its duties, doctrines, and ordinances.

AGAIN, in the courfe of their awakenings, they were brought, by the ftrivings of the Holy Spirit, to fee that the carnal mind was enmity to God and the law, to Chrift and the Gofpel, and Gofpel falvation. They faw, most clearly, that they were wholly opposed to holines, and a holy and fovereign God; that they had not the least degree of love to either: That they would not come to Chrift for life, pardon, and help: That their hearts were hard, like the flinty rock, stubborn, and unyielding. They felt that they would not bow to a fovereign God, or accept of his offered falvation in the Gospel. They would, in conversation, fay,

" My heart will not fubmit-I will hold out longer-I will still strengthen myself against God." At the fame time their diftrefs was overwhelming. They clearly perceived that all that flood in the way of their falvation was their own wickedness of heart-their enmity to God-their own proud rebellious hearts. They were rationally convinced, indeed and ready to affent, that God was both ready and able to fave and pardon-that Chrift was both able and willing to pity, hear, and blefsthat he was an all-glorious, all-willing, all-fuitable Saviour-that the law was ready, its honours being completely reftored by a Redeemer's facrificethat all heaven was ready-and all the really pious on earth wifhing that they would come, and receive the water of life freely, but that their own hearts, through pride, obduracy, felf-righteoufnefs, and unwillingnefs would not bow or confent.

MOREOVER, their awakenings or convictions were uniformly carried fo far, as to demonstrate to them, that they were in the hands of a fovereign God, who would have mercy on whom he would have mercy: That they lay altogether at uncovenanted mercy: That out of Christ, God was a confuming fire; and that it was a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God: That he would be just, and the law just should they be left to final blindness of mind and hardness of heart, to perish forever in their fins—to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God—to be punished with everlasting destruction from the prefence of the Lord and the glory of his power :---And fhould the fmoke of their torment afcend up forever and ever, it would be no more than what ftrict equity required.

LASTLY, In the midft of all this diffrefs and anguish of mind, while their hearts were rifing up in opposition to God, they were brought to fee, that he alone could help them-could bring them out of an horrible pit, and fet their feet upon a rock, and eftablish their goings : That they lay absolutely at his omnipotent mercy, and free, rich fovereign grace : That in themfelves they were helplefs and hopelefs -altogether dependant on an infinitely fovereign God for his grace to regenerate them-his compaffion to forgive them-his goodnefs to blefs themand his love to fave them, poor, guilty, vile, perishing transgreffors. In this state, they would cry for mercy and help, like blind Bartimeus-Fefus thou fon of David have mercy on me? Lord, if thou wilt thou canft make me clean ! O Lord rebuke me not in thy wrath : neither chaften me in thy hot difpleafure. For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presset me fore. There is no foundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones, because of my fin. Thus the Holy Ghost, in the use of the means of grace, the word and prayer, convinced them of fin. And when he is come he will reprove the world of fin, and of righteou/ne/s, and of judgment. Of fin because they believe not on me, of righteousness because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more. Of judgment because the Prince of this world is judged.-For I was alive without the law once : but when the commandment came fin revived, and I died.— For I through the law, am dead to the law, that I might live unto God.—Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts, and faid unto Peter, and to the reft of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do.—So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.—Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling and fell down before Paul and Silas; and brought them out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be faved ?

UNDER conviction, all had fuch views and imprefions as above described. In some, awakenings however were more deep and awful than in others. In fome they were fuller of terror than in others.— In fome of a longer, in others of a fhorter duration. Some remaining, for many weeks, under overwhelming diffres, bordering upon despair, and in feveral inftances, to the prefent time. In others, conviction feemed to perform its work, in a fhort space, a few days, or weeks. Compunction, and horror of confcience, in many, were exceedingly great. Some were arrested in a moment, in their mad career of fin, and made to tremble before God. They were, all at once, fuddenly, from a ftate of stupidity and hardness of heart, wholly at ease in Zion, despising or even scoffing at religion, thrown into an agony of diffres about their own everlasting falvation. Others were in a state of enquiry and thoughtfulness, for many days, or several weeks, and their convictions gradually arofe. Others had, comparatively, but little horror and anguish of mind, and could not feel that distres, and amazement, and agony of concern, as others whom they faw, and with whom they converfed. They would fay often, " they wanted to have their convictions rife as high as others experienced." Many were afflicted with temptations to cast off all concern about their falvation-would with that they had never been under any conviction. Others had no temptation to throw off their impressions-but were continually in dread left they fhould lofe them . -relapse back into flupidity-provoke a merciful God to withdraw from them, and give them over to final blindness of mind. Some had determined that they would not be the fubjects of fuch convictions-and thought nothing could move and affect them, as they faw others affected, but foon were brought to feel as great or greater diftrefs of mind. As many as fixty, feventy, and eighty were under deep concern, at one time-many more thoughtful, and looking upon the fcene before them, with filent folemnity. Very various were the convictions of the awakened, in many respects, and very various the occasions of them, but still all, fubftantially, reaching the fame point. While under them, it ought to be particularly noticed, all open fins were abstained from-the holy fcriptures reforted to-the fabbath fpent in cries for mercyprayer attended-the means of grace ufed-and opportunities to hear the word preached, painfully and diligently fought.-During the time of divine worship folemn profound reverence overspread the countenance. They heard as creatures made for. eternity, who do not know but the next moment they must account to their judge : Were melted down into tears and would ask for deliverance from misery in the bitterness of their fouls.—Perfons of different education—of both fexes—of all ages the man of firm nerves, and the tender child, and the gay youth trembled under the apprehension of deferved ruin. You could not keep them from a PAINFUL and DILIGENT attendance on the means of grace. They could not hear enough of the things of God's kingdom. They were reluctant at quitting the place of religious worship.—But were each case to be detailed minutely, it would require a volume to detail the whole.

I WILL now briefly flate those views, exercises, and feelings which gave them relief and hope. This is a most interesting part of the narrative. And it may not be improper here to remark, that renewing the foul after the divine image is the work of the holy fpirit : Born again not of the will of man, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of blood, but of God. Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. We are his workmanship created anew in Christ Jefus unto good works. Regeneration or the Gospel new birth is the implantation of a principle of fupreme love to God in the foul; is flaying the enmity of the heart against God; is removing its opposition against divine things; in this work the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted : The heart of stone is taken away and an heart of flesh is given : The taste, temper, and relifh of the foul is wholly changed : The heart is reconciled to God and his law : And has altogether different views, exercifes, and feelings towards divine things : Now it is holy, before it was unholy : Now is turned from fin ; has a principle of benevolence, whereas before it was actuated by fupreme felfiftnefs. And fuch views and exercifes of mind, as are now to be mentioned, were uniformly experienced, as the grounds of a hope that there was a real and found convertion, and that religious awakenings and convictions had terminated happily.

A CLEAR, delightful refreshing sense of the being, perfections and glory of God. Every thing feemed, wherever they were, or wherever they caft their eye, to announce his existence and glory. They felt themfelves furrounded with his prefence. The world appeared full of the riches of his goodnefs and greatness. All his works, the fun, moon, and fars-the fky, the winds-the clouds-the mountains-the vallies-the productions of the earththe revolving feafons appeared to fpeak in his behalf. The whole creation feemed to them to proclaim his glory-his wonderful name. And their heart feemed to go out in love, admiration, joy-delight, and praise of fuch a God-foholy-fow ise and fogracious. His fovereignty, holinefs, and righteoufnefs they could at once admire and adore. They faw him as infinitely worthy of all love, praife, gratitude, and obedience. They felt a wifh that all would afcribe to him honour, glory, bleffing, and falvationwould come and fee his glory-would come and adore and praife. Such light, joy, and fatisfaction had they, as to fay, whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none on earth that I defire befides thee; thou art the strength of my heart and my portion forever. As the hart panteth after the water-brooks so panteth my foul after thee, O God. My foul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God.

AGAIN, the law, against which they had before fo many objections, appeared to them altogether in a new light. Before their hearts had rifen up in enmity against the divine character, and the divine law. They hated the latter because fo pure—fo ftrict and fo rigorous as they termed it, in its penalty. Now it appears perfectly right and reasonable in all its demands, and requirements, its precepts and threatnings even of endless milery to disobedience. It appears to them holy—just—and good—worthy of its glorious author—worthy of all obedience, and to be the rule of their lives—and even glorious in condemning fin, and all opposition to God.

MOREOVER, fin as a tranfgreffion of this law, and offence committed againft God, appeared to them infinitely vile and abominable, and they, as infinitely wrong, criminal, and guilty for all indulgence of it, in heart or life—fecret or open. They could not defcribe in words fufficiently lively, how odious they appeared, in their own view, before God, the holy One who inhabits eternity. They faw and felt what guilty, unworthy creatures they were on account of fin—that they deferved for their innumerable tranfgreffions to be cut off from the earth-to be doomed to endless wee-to bear the wrath of Almighty God, to all eternity.

FURTHER, Christ, and his Gospel, and falvation appeared to them all-glorious. That he obeyed, fuffered, and died to honour God-the divine law, and perfections and government : To condemn fin in the flefh: That his Gospel and the way of life proposed in it, while they honour God and his law, fave also from the power of fin-and condemnation to eternal death were objects to them, full of joy. Such a Gofpel-fuch a falvation-fuch a Saviour-fuch an atonement-fuch a righteouineis -fuch a scheme of grace and pardoning mercy, how full of wonder ! How amiable how glorious the crofs of Chrift ! Here was all their hope-all their dependance for life, forgiveness, peace, and eternal bleffednefs. This Saviour they felt as though they could not help believing and trufting in : This Gofpel they could admire and welcome: This method of deliverance from fin and mifery embrace -on this atoning blood reft for pardon and acceptance with a holy and fin-hating God. Chrift, in the riches of his grace and righteoufnefs, was to them all and in all. Their help-their light-their refuge-their hope-their glory-their joy.

THE facred volume likewife was, in their view, covered with a new glory. Before they could negleft it, from month to month, without any reproaches from their inward monitor. It lay by as an useless book, comparatively.-They hated to read it; or if they did, for form's fake, open it, shey could not understand or feel what they read.

But now it feemed new, containing new truths, and new beauties. How precious in all its calls, warnings, doctrines, promifes, and inftructions? They wondered they could not fee it, in this light, before. Formerly it was dark and like a fealed book to them, but now all light and glory :--Formerly dull and unintelligible and uninteresting, but now pleasing and important, entertaining and interesting above defcription—as the PRIMARY, only rule of faith and morals.

THE duties and doctrines of religion were, alfo, beheld by them, in a new light. Faith and repentance feemed reafonable duties. In prayer and praife they delighted. O what a happinefs and privilege to be allowed to worfhip God: To truft in a Redeemer's merits—to hope for pardon, adoption, juftification and the favor of God! The peculiar and diftinguifhing doctrines of the Gofpel were alfo all efteemed and cordially embraced. How happy to adore, ferve, pray unto, and give themfelves up to God!

ALL the fpecial ordinances and inflitutions of the Golpel, though before difefteemed and neglected, when reflected upon, feemed full of grace, and divine wifdom and goodnefs, precious and important in themfelves, and in the religious life, valuable above calculation. The holy fabbath, the Christian Ministry, and the two facraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, when they came to the mind's wiew, appeared unspeakably important.

ALL moral duties also appeared to them, when they reflected upon them, highly reasonable; and binding on the confcience from the divine authority, and from their conducivenels to the best good of civil fociety; fuch as benevolence to man, righteoufnels, fobriety, temperance, humility, patience, forgivenels of injuries, love of enemies, compaffion to the poor, honesty, kindnels, truth, and abhorrence of all falsehood. Indeed, in their view, all the branches and duties of morality were clothed with a new beauty and glory.

UPON the whole, their hearts feemed to choofe and prefer religion, the Gofpel and holinefs, and falvation to all temporal objects, purfuits, and interefts however dear or important. They felt pleafed and delighted to find that repentance, holinefs, felf-denial, mortification to fin, and felf-abalement were the road to heavenly beatitude.

SUCH views and exercises as now stated they had uniformly, in a higher or lower degree, in a more or lefs clear manner-not, indeed, just in the order as now described.-In consequence of these views, their former great diftrefs and anguith of mind gradually left them. Some degree of comfortable hope would, in a few days, arife out of fuch exercises and tempers, as now stated. The most, though not all, were able to ascertain the time, place and manner of the change, of which they were the fubjects. The immediate effects of it were fo very perceiveable. Such light-peace and delightful fensations filled their minds as were unfpeakable. At first, they had no idea however that what they had experienced was the new-birth or regeneration,-Several days often paffed, before they even began to admit the thought, that they had been the fubjects of that great moral change. They apprehended, at length that they could fee and feel the truth of fuch paffages of holy writ as thefe. You bath be quickened who were dead in tre/paffes and fins. For in Chrift Jefus, neither circumcifion, availeth any thing nor uncircumcifion, but a new creature.— Therefore if any man be in Chrift he is a new creature : old things are paft away, behold all things are become new.—But ye are a chofen generation, a royal prie/thood, a holy nation, a peculiar people : that ye fhould fhow forth the praise of him, who hath called you out of darknefs into his marvellous light.

Among the large number, who have obtained a hope of falvation, is a confiderable proportion of those in a fettled family-state in the world-in the meridian of life, and feveral fomewhat advanced in life: Alfo a good proportion refpectable for their rank in life of males as well as females, though rather more of the latter-many youth, and fome quite in early youth. The work has been very general, and not limited to any age, of part of the fociety. The exercises and inward quiet and delight of those, who have obtained a hope, have likewife been very different. Some have had higher comfort and peace, and joy than others. Some have had much lefs joy and comfort. Others are unable to give any account of any deep convictions, or fenfible exercises of joy, when they hope a change paffed on their hearts. It may, therefore, be obferved that it should fatisfy all if they can fay, with the blind man, " This one thing I know that whereas I was blind, I now fee."

AFTER having made a concife statement of facts, a few inferences of a practical nature will close the fubject.

1. Is the above the nature of real evangelical piety? Is the religion of the Gospel, in its life and power, fuch? Must all who are really possesfed of it, have fuch views, exercifes, and tempers. No doubt they must have, in substance. There will be a mighty difference in degree, light, clearnes, and knowledge, becaufe the education, conftitutional make of the mind, past life, strength of mental powers and means and opportunities of improvement are very different, in different perfons. There is a diversity of operation but the same spirit. There must, for essence, in adults be the fame convictions, fame new birth-fame love to God-fame faith, fame repentance, hope, benevolence, humilitypardon-justification-fame regard to a Redeemer, to holinefs-fame love of morality, of duty, of ordinances. The circumstances will be very various, where the principle and temper are effentially the In common times, convictions are not genfame. erally fo deep and awful, but of longer duration, less steady and uniform-often intermitted and then revived. And the change in regeneration is not fo clear. Hope is gained more gradually .--- But blind eyes must be opened; hard hearts changed; vile affections purified; and morality and virtue practised. A holy God must be loved; a Saviour believed in ; fin repented of ; and religion be higheft in the choice, in all ages and places. If we have any religion at all, we shall prefer it to ought elfe.

If I forget thee, O Jerufalem, let my right hand forget ber cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerufalem to my chief joy? All of whatever communion or denomination, age or flation, that have the power of godlinefs, have effentially the fame views of, and love to divine things.

2. A GREAT and general attention to religion. among a people, is a display of the rich mercy of God. To be awakened to ferious thoughtfulnefs about our future state, and to be brought under conviction of fin and danger is altogether reasonable, and an unspeakable bleffing in divine Providence. But to be renewed in the temper of our hearts, by the power of fovereign grace, is the chief mercy, the greatest which can be conferred on us, in this How happy the effect and confequence of a life. revival of religion on church and state ! For religion is the fource of all fpiritual peace-and lays a bafis for our being happy in life, happy in death-and happy to all eternity. No wonder then that Chrift fays, there is joy in the prefence of the angels of God over one finner that repenteth. One finner brought home to God and duty is a great event. Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject to you, but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven. It must be pleasing to a benevolent mind to look forward, and contemplate the vaft fum of human happiness which shall ultimately result from the Gospel. When one is turned from fin to holiness, is made a new creature in Christ Jesus, his

Eternal happiness is fecure. When numbers, in a time of general feriousness, are, a foundation is laid for a large addition to the general fum of human felicity. Religion is a fubject in which the bleffed above take an affectionate intereft. Those benevolent spirits rejoice in the diffusion of piety among men. They love to fee FRESH ACCESSIONS to the number of those who love and fear God. There is joy in heaven when one finner repents; and greater joy when religion generally prevails, and multitudes are rifing to newnefs of life.

3. THE guilt of open oppofers or fecret enemies to the prevalence of religion, we hence infer, is heinous beyond all conception. Why fhould any be oppofers of a work of grace among a people? Nothing fo much irritates many, as to fee real piety and religion. They reproach all uncommon ferioufnefs. Atheifts, infidels, universalists-and other grofs herevics will always oppose, revile, deny, reject, and fcoff at all practical and vital piety-or any real attention among a people. They call it dehufion-enthufiafm-prieft-craft-and even afcribe it to fatanical influence. We have had no open op= pofers that I know of. If any where there be any, either open opposers, or secret enemies-any revilers, blafphemers, and fcoffers we should pray, as our Saviour did, Father forgive them for they know not what they do. At the fame time, we fhould call none oppofers or enemies, without the clearest and fulleft proofs. For it is charging them with a crime of the deepest die. All are to examine candidlyand let none be inimical till they have weighed the matter, with all poffible care and deliberation. If the work be not of God, the event will prove it. If it be, to oppofe it, is to oppofe him. As yet we have had no Apoftates—and it is earneftly hoped there will be none. If there fhould, it will not be ftrange; for there was a Judas in Chrift's own family. But if one or two fhould relapfe into former ftupidity and vice, it ought not to difcredit the whole work.

4. SUCH a revival of religion as above narrated, and as has been, in many towns and parishes, in this vicinity, by which thousands have been added to the Lord, and in various other parts of our land should convince unbelievers that there is a Holy-Ghoft : and make them at length admit the divine original of Christianity. Every foul brought from a state of nature to a state of grace may be reckoned a new proof in confirmation of the Gospel, and also a new difplay of its power. When natural men, the fpiritually blind, are enlightened in the knowledge of themfelves and of a Saviour : When a dead finner is raifed to newnefs of life, we have the fame figns of power, and a proof of greater goodnefs, in one fense, than when fun, moon, and stars were lighted up in the first world, or when a dead corpfe is called into being. God, fays Paul, who commande ed the light to thine out of darkness, bath thined in our bearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jefus Christ; and represents the fame power that raifed Jefus from the dead, as working in them that believe. If one foul thus enlightened, thus quickened fets before us a lively inftance of boundless compassion, and Almighty power, how convincing the proof when great numbers. as in the present case, are the subjects of renewing grace ?

5. THE real people of God, Christians, should improve this defcent of the Holy Ghoft on fo many places, the feafon past, for strengthening their faith ;---and as an occasion of praise and gratitude to a merciful God. Their prayers should be more Their zeal more ardent. When God fervent. pours out his fpirit, how happy the effect ! A revival of religion is the confequence. This fhould lead them to hope more firmly in the accomplishment of all the promifes of the out-pouring of the fpirit, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God, and of his Chrift : And to encourage their joint supplication, that this whole land, and all the churches of Chrift may be watered with the fame bleffed dew of heaven.

6. MINISTERS need not defpond, though their labours hitherto have not been remarkably owned. They are to prefson, in laying before men, the PLAIN and PECULIAR, and DISTINGUISHING doffrines of the Gofpel.—God may foon blefs and fucceed them. At the fame time all ranks, ages, and conditions fhould, above all, defire to feel the divine influence, and to fhare in the heavenly bleffing. If THIS PRECIOUS SEASON OF GRACE—THIS HAPPY DAY OF GOD'S MERCIFUL VISITATION be not improved, it may never return again. Now God is ftriving with us by his word, by his Providence, and by his fpirit. But if we continue to reject the heavenly call, his fpirit will not always ftrive with us. . There must ere long be an end of divine patience and forbearance. The mercy-feat may foon remove, a flaming tribunal appear, and the fceptre of peace change into the fword of juffice. In these awful moments, they who have defpited this mercy of the Lamb, shall perish by the wrath of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Present opportunities of attaining everlasting life, being then forever overloft and gone, can only ferve to heighten their mifery, and render it more intolerable. We ought to admire alfo divine goodnefs, fovereign grace, and patience. Hath God come thus, feafonably, to his temple, by a glorious ministration of his fpirit in a happy revival of religion here, and in a large number of places around us, and in various parts of our land, at a time when errors, vice, scepticifm, and immorality were lamentably prevailing? And shall we not meet him with our humble praifes and grateful acknowledgments? It may be faid of us, as of the Jews of old, Ifrael hath not been forfaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hofts though their land was filled with fin against the holy One of I/rael.-Should not fo much undeferved kindnefs, this wonderful love melt us down into tears of godly forrow, and bring us to a hearty confeffion of all our fins, whether of a perfonal, or more public nature. It is an endearing call to us to endeavour at a reformation of morals, and a more exalted fenfe of the worth of the Gofpel, beginning at our own hearts and houses, that every foul, and family, and every place may be a fit habitation of Jacob's mighty God.

LASTLY, I shall conclude with observing, that it is deeply to be lamented, that any who believe in, and revere the glorious Gofpel, should ever fpeak reproachfully of the fpecial operations of grace, in any general ferioufness among a people, or depreciate the revival of religion, any where. Must it not be attributed, in good men, to misinformation or mistake. It is a dangerous thing to cenfure without proper inquiry. But when done opportunity is afforded for the exercise of Christian forbearance and fympathy :---And it should make us long for a removal to Mount Moriah, the land of vision above, where all the true lovers of Jesus shall dwell together in perfect unity-where no wrong views or prejudices will ever be admitted-where the whole scene of present worship shall be over, and we shall no more see darkly as through a glass but face to face-and where perfect light will lay a foundation for perfect harmony and love.
