SERMON I.

On the goodness of GOD.

MATTHEW XIX. 17.

THERE is none good but one, that is GOD.

A TRUE conception of divine goodnefs, is neceffary for a right understanding of God's infinite nature, and of his eternal government. The goodnefs or love of God, means his holinefs, his whole rectitude, and all the moral perfections of his nature; which we defcribe by different names, from the various effects produced in the state of creatures, by the divine action. Every thing in the moral character of God, may be refolved into his goodnefs or holinefs. Acts of justice, are also acts of goodnefs. God is as good in making a connection between fin and mifery, and in punishing impenitent transferfors; as he is in giving life and immortality to the holy.

THE idea, of there being fome kind of oppofition between the goodness and justice of GoD, arifes entirely from the unholinefs of men. If there had been no depravity in creatures, fuch an opinion would never have entered their minds, and they would have afcribed every event of the divine government, to unmixed and most glorious goodnefs.

It is very common for thofe, who live in fin, to pleafe themfelves with the attribute of goodnefs, and on this account think there is fafety for them, while they are exceedingly afraid of juffice; but if GoD's juffice be a part of his goodnefs, thefe pleafing expectations are but a delufion. From the beginning, GoD hath and ever will, follow the dictates of goodnefs in his government. The divine love cannot, therefore, be admitted as any ground for fecurity in fin; for eafe in an unholy life; or for the neglect of experimental piety. Goodnefs when rightly underftood, denounces terror to every finner.

ALL will allow, that the love of GOD was difplayed on the crofs of CHRIST, to the highest degree; on the crofs alfo we fee his feverity against fin. The cross of love, furnishes the most folemn warning to finners, who delay and tranfgress; and the preacher of terror to ungodly men, will go to Calvary, for his most ferious admonitions. It is from a very falfe idea of divine goodnefs, that any make it the ground of their fecurity; for if GOD had not established a connection between fin and mifery; if he did not punish fin, and keep up this connection in his government, it would be an eafy thing to prove, in contradiction to our text, that he is not a good being; and if not a good being, not worthy of love, adoration and obedience.

IT will be univerfally conceded, that the redemption of finners, arole from the goodnels of Serm. I.

GOD; and it ought alfo to be received, that the punifhment of impenitents, arifes from the fame perfection. It is as much a part of infinite goodnefs, by no means to clear the guilty; as it is to be the LORD, the LORD GOD, gracious, merciful and long-fuffering. Men in the practice of fin, are apt enough to hope from the goodnefs of GOD; but it would be much more for their advantage to fear a continuance in fin, from the fame caufe.

BUT why, it may be afked, fhall we give this terrible appearance to the goodness of God? I anfwer, to whom is it terrible ? To none but finners who do not repent, and fuch have no right to any but terrible things. And why is it terrible to finners, who do not repent ? Becaufe their whole temper is wrong; and wrong tempers and practices ought not to be foothed, and to do it is partaking in the fin. If it could be proved, that goodnefs when juftly understood, doth not contain a warning to finners, of great danger to themfelves; by the fame proof, it might be made evident Gop is not a good being. It is, certainly, a part of goodness in a Supreme Governor, to frown on every thing, either of temper or practice, which, in its nature, tends to deftroy general peace and happinefs. Whatever hath this tendency is fin. It is this tendency which makes it to be fin. The goodnefs of a Supreme Governor, requires him to frown on it by the most efficacious marks of his displeasure; and if he should not do it, our evidence of his goodnefs or moral rectitude, would be greatly diminished. After these general remarks on the fubject, I propofe the following method.

I. To defcribe the goodness of God, as it exists in his own infinite mind. II. WHAT evidence we have that GOD is good —to be followed by fome inferences from the doctrine.

I. To defcribe the goodnefs of GoD, as it exifts in his own infinite mind.

THE goodnefs of GOD, confifts in his love of the greatest sum of happines, in the kingdom of which he is the head and supreme fovereign. His whole government, from first to last, conduces to this end. For this he created, rules, redeems, and will forever reign over angels and men.

THE definition I have given of goodnefs, I think, is agreeable to holy fcripture, to reafon, and the common fenfe and feelings of men, in all cafes, where they are not prejudiced to the contrary. We cannot call any being good, who prefers mifery to happinefs; nor infinitely good, if he prefers a leffer degree, to the greateft poffible fum of happinefs. Difpofitions and actions, become morally good or holy, from their tendency in their own nature, to produce happinefs or natural good; and if they have not this tendency, according to the conftruction of the intelligent univerfe, and its connection by focial bonds and obligations, they cannot be called holy.

HAPPINESS is valuable and a fit object of benevolent defire, according to its quantity, and not from its being enjoyed by this or another perfon. A fimilar degree of happinels, is as really valuable in one perfon, as in another ; in one country, age or world, as in another ; and the goodnels of GoD difpofes him, to make by his government the greatest fum of happinels in the whole.

IT may be afked, how then can any intelligent creature contend with Gon's government? All intelligent creatures love and feek happines, and if the nature, laws and government of GoD, feek the greateft fum of happinefs, how can they rebel? If divine government feeks the greateft happinefs, and creatures are feeking their own happinefs in all they do, why is their temper forbidden and punifhed as a fin?

T'HE question, for its importance, deferves an anfwer; and it leads us to a direct fight of native depravity. The anfwer will equally illustrate the goodnefs of GOD, and the fin of creatures. Divine goodnefs defires the greatest fum of happinels in the universe. The finful creature's defire of happiness is limited to himself, and that he may be the most happy possible whether he bedeferving or not, and whatever effect his own exaltment may have, on the glory of GoD and the good of others. He feeks himfelf in all he does. To himfelf his defires are limited, and here all his motives center and terminate. By defire, he puts himfelf in the place of GoD, and his whole kingdom; and in this confifts his idolatry-his unholinefs and odioufnefs in the divine fight.

HERE arifes the impoffibility of a union between GOD, the head of his own kingdom, and finners; until their hearts are changed by his fanctifying fpirit, and made conformable to him in a love of the greatest happines.

It hence appears that pride, avarice, a love of fenfual pleafure, and all the fin of mens hearts and lives, arife from a temper, that is directly contrary to the goodnefs of GoD and the interest and happinefs of his kingdom.—They are not to be condemned for approving happinefs, for this ought to be approved and defired. The fin is in loving themfelves and their own happinefs fupremely—in undervaluing the real excellence and happinefs of other beings—in making their own will and defire the measure of right and rule of action, in opposition to the nature of Gob, who is perfectly excellent, and to his will which feeks the greatest fum of happiness.

PLAIN as this truth is, to those who have felt in their own hearts, an affection conformable to the divine goodnefs; it is still very difficult, to give to those who never felt, a fuitable idea of its nature or even of its reality. Having never felt fuch holy affection in themfelves, nor feen its true glory in any other being, it is with difficulty they fuppose it exists, or that there is any temper different from the felfishness, by which they have ever been governed. Even in their conceptions of the most holy God and his government, they are prone, from this reafon, to fuppofe him a felfish being, and that when he punishes he acts in paffion, in revenge, as felfish, felf-willed finners do. Whereas, in truth, the punishments and afflictions with which he vifits creatures, are the fruit of goodness, and the effect of a scheme of counfel, which will produce the greatest fum of happinefs, in the kingdom created by his power, and governed by his wifdom and goodnefs.

In the end, it will appear there is the moft happinels pollible, and that infinite power, wildom and goodnels have not labored in vain. God himfelf, whole boundlels nature doth now and ever will contain, infinitely the greateft part of being, will be most happy and glorious; and in the created fystem there will be the greateft pollible bleffednels. A love of this, is the divine goodnels; to accomplish this, is his defire, and the ultimate end of every event in his government. This is the love that composes his being; the goodnels as for being the the tender mercy that is over all his works.

We find many inftances recorded in the holy fcriptures, in which acts of feverity and punifhment are afcribed to the goodnefs of God, as much as his bounties and the offers of forgivenefs. God is often praifed in his word for his righteous judgments on the wicked, and thefe judgments are confidered as evidence that he is a good king.

GOD told Mofes he would caufe his goodnefs to pass before him; and in naming this goodnefs, he fays, God gracious, merciful, long-fuffering, and that will by no means clear-the guilty. In the cxxxvi. Pfalm, the fmiting of the first born of Egypt-the destruction of Pharaoh-the ruin of great kings, and the flaying famous kings, are traced up to the glorious fource that his mercy and goodnefs endureth forever. Tho' punishment implies pain to the perfon who endures it, it doth not imply any want of goodness in GoD, or that it is not his fupreme delight to be good. On this ground we are commanded to rejoice always and evermore. There may be many cafes, in which our own fituation, if confidered by itfelf, would be no reafon for rejoicing ; but there is no cafe in our own fituation, confidered in connection with the whole, which is not neceffary for the general good; and thus there is always room to rejoice, that God is good-that he reigns-and by every exifting event is promoting the fum of general happinefs.

In this fenfe God always rejoices in his own government, tho' it be in many inflances punitory; not becaufe he delights in those punishments separately confidered, for separately confidered they are disagreeable; but in connection with the system of divine counsel, they are the most direct, and only possible means of the greatest happines.

THE remarks which have been made on the divine goodnefs, may be fummed up in the following.

THE goodness of God comprehends his whole moral perfection, and his infinite rectitude, in which he is glorious, and worthy of all love and adoration. It confifts in a love of the greatest possible happiness in intelligent being, and to make this he created and governs nature. Every moral perfection of his nature, however named by us, is a part of his goodnefs. Every act of his government, thro' an eternity paft and an eternity to come, will lead directly to his main defign; and the incapacity of finite understanding to comprehend the ways of GoD, is not a fufficient reason to doubt of his love. Nothing less than the greatest fum of happiness can be the supreme object of a holy goodness. The pains endured by creatures, and the punifhments inflicted by GoD, are as truly dictated by goodnefs, as the bestowment of particular favors, becaufe they are defigned by him for the general advantage; therefore God always rejoices in his own government, and the command to creatures, to rejoice evermore, is reasonable.

SEVERAL important inferences flow from this part of the fubject.

Ift. IT teaches how worthy the LORD JEHO-VAH is to be adored and ferved.

HE is a GoD all goodnefs, and therefore all glorious. It is only to moral perfection or goodnefs, that excellency or glory are to be afcribed. Knowledge and power may be great and aftonifhing; but do not neceffarily imply glory as goodnefs doth. A being who poffeffes power, which furprizes us, may be very inglorious and dreadful. JEHOVAH is both great and good. His goodnefs appears more wonderful, to thofe who fee it juftly, than his power doth. The amiablenefs of his character fwells on our view, until it becomes glory inexpreffible by the language of creatures, and inconceivable by finite minds.—The whole of his vaft government is the work of goodnefs.—None will deny the bleffings of creation, providence and redemption to be fuch; neither ought they to deny his punifhments alfo to be fuch, for they are neceffary in his kingdom to produce the greateft fum of happinefs, as his bounties are. Thro' an eternity paft, and an eternity to come, all has been, and will be, goodnefs in infinite action, to produce a most bleffed kingdom, and the greateft good thro' an infinite duration.

IN thinking on this fubject, our hearts ought to be warmed until we can fay, eye hath not feen, ear hath not heard, neither hath the heart of man conceived, the caufe we have to adore and love GOD. The motives of divine government being once juftly underflood, wherever we go, or whatever we fee, administers reason to rejoice and adore the Lord. If called upon to produce the reasons of our rejoicing, we may appeal to all the bounties of providence, and all the bleffings of redemption; yea more, to our very trials and groans, for tribulation worketh joy to those who receive it right, and even its effects on the obstinate will make the caufe of GOD more glorious.

2dly. FROM the goodness of GOD, we learn the duty of cheerful submission to all the works of his government.

THE works of his government are always right, as they always tend to the fupreme good. He hath infinite power and knowledge, to execute the purpofes of infinite love; and can never be miftaken in the courfe to be purfued, or fail in choofing the best and most direct means of accomplifhment. As this is the moral character, and thefe the natural powers of GoD, there can never be a reafon to murmur, or think he doeth unwifely. Our incapacity, to fee how all events are the confequence of infinite love, is no evidence against the fact. Every day gives new evidence of this truth, and it will be accumulating thro' eternity. Who by fearching can find out GOD, or perfectly know the wifdom of his ways! —Every repining thought is implety;—and every wifh that the principles of his government fhould be changed, is opposition to his nature; for his law is an expression of his character, and his providence is his nature acted out, by external notices, to the knowledge of his creatures.

GoD fuffers us to pray for deliverance from evil, and makes it our duty to use the means of prefervation; but if our prayer be denied, and the means prove unfuccessful, we ought to acquiesce in his holy and wise ordering—to bless him under affliction—to fay, the' he flay me I will trust in him, I will adore the goodness which orders all events, without defiring his throne to be shaken, or his counfels altered in the smalless particular.

3dly. The goodness of GOD shows that fin is exceeding evil, and will forever be without excuse.

ALL fin is an opposition to GOD. If we opposed an unwife being—a being who is malevolent, and an enemy to the greatest good, there would be an excuse for the opposition, and our confciences would support us. But whom do we oppose? A good being—a friend of happiness —a GOD, who from the beginning, hath created and governed to produce the greatest supposed and solver.

have a natural tendency to make the most bleffed kingdom, and to make us partakers in it, if we do not oppofe him. What excufe can be made for this oppofition? Shall we fay it pleafes us to oppofe and difobey? The very excufe will condemn us, for the more we are pleafed with oppofing a fovereign, who is good in his nature, in his laws, and in his government, the more guilty we are. The tranfgreffor's pleafure in finning, is the proof of his guilt, and the only proof which will be needed in the day of trial. Shall we fay, we loved our fins more than the fpiritual duties of religion? This love is the fin, and pleading it, is in a fense pleading guilty. Who will stand on our fide, when our fin appears to be a direct oppolition to the infinite love of GoD? No creature, whose temper is right, will justify us. Our very companions in vice will condemn us, when they can no longer profit by our fins. Even our own confciences will condemn us. Self-condemnation is an awful ingredient in the punifiment of fin, and it is one from which the guilty can never efcape. If they could fly away from all other accufation, from this they can never fly. They must remain felf-condemned fo long as intelligence lasts. And the more evidently they fee the good character of GoD, and the tendency of his whole work to produce the most happines, the more miferable they will become by felf-accufation.

4thly. THE nature of divine goodnefs is a proof, that felfifh and unholy minds must be miferable, until there is a change of their temper.

THE good government of GOD is purfuing one end, and they another. GOD is feeking the greatest fum of happiness, a general good; and they are seeking their own happiness, a particular good, on the principles of exclusive advantage to themfelves.—A confcioufnefs that the power of GoD, who is oppofed to them, will overcome, must be a fource of constant inquietude.

IN every refpect, fin lays a foundation for forrow and punifhment.—Moft of the finful paffions are painful in their very exercife—they caufe an accufing confcience—they contend with GoD, who muft overcome—the conviction of the finner, that he is wholly under the power of GoD, whofe purpofes run counter to his own defires, muft fill him with the utmost defpair, after he hath finned away the day of grace.

Gon is love—Gon is a confuming fire.—Thefe two defcriptions of the fupreme nature, are perfectly confiftent. That fight of infinite love, by which holy minds are purified and made happy; like fire will pain the felfifh and unholy, and the goodnefs of Gon will feal their unhappinefs.

How evil is the nature of fin, which renders creatures oppofed to the general good, and wretchcd in themfelves! How full of majefty is the LORD our GoD! Good in his own infinite mind, and building up around him a kingdom of holinefs and everlafting glory. AMEN.

SERMON II.

The evidence of divine goodnefs.

MATTHEW XIX. 17.

THERE is none good but one, that is GOD.

IN a preceding difcourfe from thefe words, two things were propofed.

I. To defcribe the goodness of GoD, as it exists in his own infinite mind.

II. WHAT evidence we have that GOD is good.

To an inquiry for the evidence of divine goodnefs, or that GoD is a holy being, we will now attend. It has already been obferved, that the goodnefs of GOD includes his whole moral perfection, all that rectitude, which makes him worthy of love, adoration and obedience.

THE evidence of divine goodnefs is derived from two fources. First, from the light of nature and reason; or in other words, it is known by the judgment, which a rational creature may form, from the evidence contained in creation, and the government of the world, and those moral agents who inhabit it. THE fecond fource of evidence for divine goodnefs is in the revelation GoD hath made of himfelf, his will, and the ultimate defign of his government. Each of thefe fources of evidence are fufficient to fhow, that GoD is good or holy. By the firft, the heathen who have not a revelation, are rendered inexcufable for their fins; by the fecond, impenitent finners under the light of revelation, which contains the greatest evidence of goodnefs, become the most guilty of mankind.

No one will deny, the evidence of GoD's goodnefs to be increafed, in a very great degree, by his word; in which his character is drawn, his purpofes and counfels made known, and his motives for appointing mifery fully expressed. Some of the most plausible objections against the goodnefs of GoD are completely refuted in the scriptures, and the dark parts of his government explained to the understanding of men.

IT is also allowed, that the light of revelation makes the natural evidence appear with more flrength, than it could without a written word. Also that fome of the inftructing effects of a revelation, may have been found among most people, either by tradition or through fome other means. Notwithstanding this, it is conceived, the works of creation and providence, do contain an evidence distinct from revelation, that the author and governor is good.

IN men's inquiries on this fubject, they are apt to mingle two questions, which ought to be kept distinct.

THE first is, Whether there be natural evidence of God's moral character? The fecond, Whether men in general have feen this evidence, fo as to be convinced of divine rectitude. There may be evidence, which is not fought after or received. If a man in christian lands, doth not read the books of revelation, or is fo immerfed in fenfual purfuits and gratifications as to neglect the means of instruction, he will be ignorant of the revealed evidence of divine goodnefs. This is actually the cafe with the greater part of perfons in christian lands. They neglect reading the holy fcriptures .- Their thoughts are wholly on the amufements and interefts of the world and the gratification of their own lufts .- Even in their attendance on public worship, their thoughts are in the ends of the earth. Such perfons flow an amazing ignorance of GoD's moral character, still this is no argument against plenary revealed evidence of his rectitude. So with respect to those, who are without revelation; though the books of nature and providence lie open, they have never read them. Perhaps not one in a million of fuch perfons have attained to a knowledge of divine goodnefs, but this doth not prove the total want of natural evidence whether GOD be a good or evil being.

FURTHER, it is certain that the glory of truth is hidden from all unholy perfons, though they have both the natural and revealed evidence; and a fight of the glory of truth is perhaps a fource of higher conviction to the mind than any other.

THE following are fome of the reafons for an opinion, that there is fufficient natural evidence of divine goodnefs.

Ift. IF there be not evidence antecedent to revelation, both of the being and goodness of GoD, it is not seen how there can be a certain reliance on the truth of scripture.

It is always required we give evidence from creation and providence, of the being of GOD, before we attempt to prove a revelation is from him. It alfo feems proper, to evince his goodnefs from the fame fource, before we call on mankind to receive his word as infallible truth ; for if he be not a good being he may take delight in deceiving impotent creatures, and having great power, he might carry on the fraud through many ages, by miraculous operations, and by predicting and fulfilling his own predictions, to make a final difappointment the most diftreffing. —It appears, therefore, to be fit men should have prior evidence, both of the being and moral character of God, before they are called upon to receive his word as infallible truth.

2dly. The fcriptures do in many places, either directly or impliedly, refer to creation and the governing providence of GoD, for evidence of his goodness and moral perfection. When GOD looked on creation he faw the whole to be good, both fitted to the use for which it was made, and to fhow the goodness of the creator. If the creation appeared fitted for a good defign, this was evidence that the creator was a good being. The holy fcriptures do continually appeal to the works of nature and providence, as evidence of GoD's moral perfection and our obligation to ferve him. David, in calling on men to praife the LORD recapitulates the works of nature, and the events of divine government for evidence of the duty; but these must also be evidential of goodness, in order to fhow that we ought to praife GoD, for a being destitute of goodness cannot, in any case, have a right to our praife. Or, if any confider the works of nature, as evidence only of Gon's natural perfection, his knowledge and power; this is infufficient, for natural perfection of the higheft degree without goodnefs, is not worthy of praise.

THE apostle Paul, clearly decides this point, in the first and second chapters of the epistle to the Romans. He is expressly treating of the immoral character and guilt of the heathen, and confiders the circumstance of their having no written law or revelation to teach them. (Chap. i. verse 19, 20.) Because that which may be known of GOD, is manifest in them; for GOD hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being undershood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and GODHEAD; so that they are without excuse.

Serm. II. Evidence of divine goodness.

THE claufe, fo that they are without excufe, fixes the apoftle's meaning. The invifible things of GOD, and his eternal power and GODHEAD, which are faid to be clearly feen by the things which are made, muft include his moral as well as natural perfections; otherwife, they would not be without excufe. Men cannot be inexcufable for their fins without knowing a moral law, for where there is no law there is no tranfgreffion. They cannot know a moral law without a knowledge of the lawgiver. A knowledge of the law, and of the lawgiver's character, mutually imply each other. Knowing GOD's power only, never could have acquainted the heathen with a moral law, and being ignorant of this, they could not have been inexcufable.

THIS idea is confirmed by what the apoftle fays, (Chap. ii. verfes 12, 14, 15,) For as many as have finned without law, fhall alfo perifh without law: and as many as have finned in the law shall be judged by the law. For when the Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law are a law unto themfelves, which show the works of the law written in their hearts, their conficience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excufing, one another. By having, or being without the written law, in this paffage; is meant, having the law and inftruction of revelation, or being defitute of it. He confiders thofe who have not the written law, ftill as having the law, and a condemning or acquitting conficience. How there can be a knowledge of the law, and a condemning conficience to juftify GoD in the day of judgment, which the apoftle alfo mentions, is difficult to conceive, unlefs there be evidence of his moral character in creation and the works of providence.

In the fcriptures, the heathen are often defcribed as finning against light and knowledge-as being wilful in their fin-their idolatry in worfhipping flocks and flones, and the hoft of Heaven, and in departing from the true God is charged as a great crime; but it is not feen how this idolatry could be fo great a crime, if they had not evidence of GoD's moral perfections, and fuch evidence as they would univerfally have feen if their hearts had been right. It is the moral perfections of God which entitle him to worfhip. It would be as unreasonable to worfhip an infinitely evil being, as it is to bow before ftocks and ftones. In this manner, the fcriptures bear testimony, that the goodness and rectitude of God are evidenced to human reason, even without a revelation.

IF GOD be not a good being, why is the human body in all refpects adapted to the convenience of the poffeffor. Why is the world ftored with objects to fatisfy our neceffary wants. Why is material nature dreffed in fuch a profution of beauty? An evil GoD would certainly have fpread it rouud with the curtains of deformity. Why is there a conftant provision for the wants of man and beaft. Why is there a preparation for all the focial relations, which with the aid of virtue, would make the human ftate happy indeed. Why, in fhort, is there a natural conflitution to make the good happy and the finful miferable, for this is the cafe in both.

THE wages or confequences of fin, are pain of body and mind, unhappinefs in the focial connections, and death. Intemperance is followed with difeafe and torment ; difhonefty with lofs of reputation, and mens abhorrence; the gratification of finful lufts, with wars, fightings and infamy. Enmity and hatred are proper names to express the inward torment of the finner, and a condemning confcience, is certainly found in the finner's own breaft, whether he hath a revelation or not. The most pleasing finful enjoyments are followed with diffatisfaction and a remaining fenfe of want, which is not a fmall degree of mifery. Take the most prosperous finner, one of whom the world will fay he hath every thing to make him happy, he still remains unhappy, thro' innumerable wants and defires of an unfatisfied heart. Milery is prepared both for immoral actions and an unholy heart; and fuch a mind will forever remain unhappy.

On the other hand, there is a tendency in nature and providence, to reward moral virtue with happinefs.

TEMPERANCE and industry promote health and mental vigor, and give us the neceffary comforts of time. Truth and integrity obtain the confidence and love of mankind. A religious temper and practice produce peace of confcience, and happinefs in all the focial relations; and where the objects of religious love are chosen, peace of mind follows. This general ftructure of nature and providence will appear to a perfon who confiderately examines; and if there be found a tendency to reward virtue with happinefs and to punish vice, it shows the creator to be pleased with goodness, and having found with what he is pleased, there is no difficulty in knowing what his moral character is.

FURTHER, the existence of natural conficience in all men will not be denied. It is found in places where a revelation, in the common meaning of the word, never reached. Whence comes this judgment of natural conficience? It must either be founded on furrounding natural evidence addressed to the understanding, or be a constant revelation to the mind; and the latter is too abfurd to suppose.

IT is conceived, for thefe reafons and fundry others which might be mentioned, that the works of creation and providence contain evidence that GoD is a being of most glorious goodness.

THE only reafon mankind do not fee this evidence, is the finfulnefs of their own hearts. We know men have very different opinions of the divine character, and that vicious motives, and even the enormity of fin have been attributed to the GODHEAD. But is this confined to the places in which a revelation never fhone? By no means. In christian lands, a multitude of people, with the Bible before them, form as falle notions of GOD's moral perfections as the heathen do, and appear to be without true apprehensions of divine holinefs,

WHERE was more grofs idolatry ever committed than in ancient lirael, who had the law and the prophets; or than in the modern antichriftian world, poffeffing the compleat cannon of fcripture? But we do not from this determine the holy fcriptures to be deficient in evidence of the divine holinefs, and his fole right to adoration, prayer and worfhip.

THE light shineth in the darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not. This is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. One thing meant by light in these facred passages, is evidence of truth. They were, perhaps, spoken of revealed evidence of truth, but apply as well to natural evidence. The absurd notions men have had of the divine character, are no ground to determine against the fufficiency cither of natural or revealed evidence, for the moral perfection of JEHOVAH.

SINFUL minds do not feek evidence; they are prejudiced againft it; they do not fee the glory of truth; they try to pervert it, that they may gratify their own hearts, and live with a quiet confcience, at eafe in fin. All this is no argument againft the fufficiency of light. In a thoufand inftances, it fhines in the darknefs of an unholy mind, and the darknefs comprehendeth it not.

SUPPOSE a creature of perfect holinefs were placed in the world, without a revelation; but with all the other means and opportunities to learn GoD's character, which men have. It is prefumed, that from creation and providence he would learn the holinefs of the Lord—that he is oppofed to fin and will punifh it—and would fay, nature is fo filled with evidence that GoD is good, and requires it in men, they will be inexcufable for all unholinefs, and cannot plead before the judgment feat, the impoffibility of knowing the character of their judge.

But it may be objected, there is mifery in the world, and how do we know GoD doth not delight in mifery, rather than in happinefs ? I anfwer, fuch a holy mind as I have fuppofed, even from the miferies of the world, as they are appointed and applied in the prefent divine government, would learn that the Lord is a good being. The pure and holy creature I have fuppofed, by means of his holinefs would fee the infinite evil of fin, the justice of GOD in condemning, and in appointing the greatest degree of punishment for the guilty; and when he come to compare the demerit of fin, with the mifery that actually happens, he would even from this determine GOD to be a good being. Seeing how much lefs mifery there is than fin deferves-how many mercies are mingled with human forrows and pains-how kind the Lord is to the evil and unthankful-how calculated his judgments are to warn, to reclaim, to prevent fin; and attending to all the circumstances under which pain and affliction exift, he would conclude the being who orders this, to be gracious and infinite in his goodnefs. The pains of another world will be retributive; but I think, that even without a revelation, there only needs a holy heart, to fee that the pains and miferies of this world, are fo alloted and mingled with alleviations and mercies, as prove the prefent state to be corrective and difciplinary; and if GOD appears to act rather as a correcting than retributing judge, thefe very pains are evidence of his goodnefs.

IT may be objected further; fin exifts, which God had power to prevent, and without a revelation, this would make it probable he delights in fin rather than in goodnefs or holinefs. To answer this let us again suppose a mind of perfect holinefs called in, to judge of GoD's character from the existing state of things in the world. And what would he fee ? He would fee a world full of finners, creatures made by GoD, who are evil inftead of good. What befide this would he fee? He would behold GOD treating them with great patience and long fuffering-following their ingratitude with kindnefs-fending his rain and caufing his fun to shine on the unjust-he would observe the general fystem of nature constructed to do them good, to reward every virtue with happiness and every vice with pain-he would fee all things and events fetting the most powerful motives before them to be holy and good. From the general profpect and viewing all its parts, notwithstanding the fact of there being fin, he would conclude the Supreme Creator to be good; and that if he were not good, he never could treat finners as he doth, or fill nature and providence all around them with the most powerful motives to leave their fin; and though he might not be able to account for the event, would fill determine it to be confistent with infinite goodnefs. It is conceived, our own fin and prejudice is the only thing that prevents our feeing a natural evidence of GoD's holinefs.

I HAVE enlarged on this branch of evidence that GoD is good, becaufe it is neceffary for two points; to establish the holy for the fully to expose human guiltines, and also fully to expose human guiltines, and fet the criminal nature of fin in fuch a point of view, as it will appear at the day of trial and final judgment.

I KNOW, that fome have endeavored to effablifh the fufficiency of a natural evidence of the moral character of GOD, hoping thereby to invalidate the need of revelation; but I am not in Evidence of divine goodnefs. Serm. II.

the least alarmed by the attempt. As a friend of revelation, I will thank all who oppofe it, to affift me in collecting natural evidence of the goodnefs of GoD; for the more they collect, the more they will establish its truth, and not at all detract from the need of its being given. The more alfo, they will prove themfelves to be very guilty finners, and in need of fuch a falvation by fovereign and fanctifying grace as is taught only in the holy fcriptures.

WHETHER GOD be infinitely good ; and whether infinite goodnefs will ever fave finners, and if he will, how it must be done, are questions distinct in their nature, and ought not to be mingled. For the affirmative of the first we have both natural and revealed evidence, which shows the infinite evil of fin, and the transforeffor's defert of eternal punishment. For the last, whether infinite goodnefs will ever pardon fin ; and if he will, on what terms and by what expiation, we have only revealed evidence, the testimony of holy foripture.

OUR SECOND source of evidence for divine goodnefs, is in the revelation Gon hath made of himfelf and his will. Though there be a fufficient natural evidence, to render finners inexcufable in the day of judgment; the revealed is more clear and explicit. The character of God is drawn in the best manner to affist us in conceiving of him. All holinefs is attributed to him. The unity of his nature and counfels are afferted. The doctrine of the trinity, most important in the fcheme of redemption, is revealed. The harmony of his perfections, which men conceive feverally, is stated. The promotion of holiness and happinefs, is told to be the great defign of his government in all its difpenfations. The immutability of his nature and councils, and perfect harmony of his defign, in all he does, is illuftrated. Many of the myfterious parts of his providence are opened to the underftanding of creatures. The final rewards of his moral government, are placed before the hopes and fears of men, fo as to act most powerfully upon them. And the inquiry, whether and how he will fave finners is determined beyond room for doubting.

By the character of GOD, which is drawn in revelation, we learn him to be all goodnefs and love.—Good in his mercies; in the afflictions which he appoints to men; in forgiving the penitent, and in finally punifhing the impenitent.— All appearance of contradiction or partiality, in the exercife of mercy to fome, and the execution of ftrict juffice on others, is removed; and the good of the whole, which is the only object worthy of infinite love, is declared to be fought by GOD, in all his counfels and works.

THOUGH there be natural evidence of divine goodnefs, infinite wifdom judged a revelation of his true character to be proper, for many reafons. Sundry have been hinted, and the two following ought to be particularly mentioned.

1. IT gives great additional knowledge of the nature of GoD's holinefs or goodnefs, and the fpiritual purity of his law; whereby the fewho wifh to ferve him, are affifted in doctrine and practice, and wilful finners are more apparently inexcufable. It is a dictate of goodnefs, that the nature, both of holinefs and fin, fhould come into most plain view. The increase of evidence, increases knowledge. The increase of knowledge tends to promote more eminent holinefs in the obedient, and fhows the exceeding finfulness of fin in tranfgreffors. By the union of natural and revealed light, GoD will become very glorious in the rewards he appoints. Especially, the guilt and just condemnation of finners will be seen with convincing clearness, when it is known that they transferested, both against great natural evidence, and the full blaze of revealed instruction.

2. But the most important purpose for which a revelation was given, is to determine the queftion; Whether infinite goodnefs will fave finners, and by what means redemption is effected. From a fimple knowledge that GOD is good, though it be on the greatest evidence, we cannot determine finners will be reclaimed, forgiven and made happy. The law which forbids fin and denounces eternal punifhment, was ordained in goodnefs; and human reafon, from natural evidence, never could be certain any transgreffors would be releafed from this condemnation and punifhment. Reafon could not fay, but fin and mifery must be eternal, in every instance where they commence. No difcovery could be made of any means, for glorifying GoD and advancing the happinefs of his kingdom by the pardon of wicked creatures. For this knowledge we are wholly indebted to the scriptures, and therefore it is faid, that by JESUS CHRIST, life and immortality are brought to light, that is, a holy and glorious life and immortality. God, in his word, has affured us some finners shall be faved from their fins, and confequently from the miferies of the world to come. He hath taught us the method of redemption, by the life, obedience and death of his Son; by a fatisfying atonement, and the fanctification of his Holy Spirit; by a gracious forgivenefs, and title by free promife to the glorious bleffednefs of another world. The whole fyftem, of gofpel doctrine confirms this grace, and teaches us how the unworthy are taken from guilt and reigning fin and brought to glory. When we confider the manner of redemption; the connected doctrines in this wonderful scheme of grace; the character into which his people are formed by a divine influence; the evangelical affections and duties of real christians; the motives of divine wifdom in that mixed variety of events, which take place in this world; together with the descriptions of future glory to the faints, expressed by the highest images of present nature; the whole ferves as an additional and the higheft evidence of divine goodnefs. All moral perfections in the SUPREME NATURE, fhine with new evidence and a great degree of manifeltation, by revealed grace through a Saviour. The moral glory of JEHOVAH, is feen in the face of JESUS CHRIST, by men and angels, beyond what it could have been without a redemption of finners. All this is conceded; but from this it by no means follows, there is not natural evidence of God's holinefs. We have also reason to fuppofe, that evidence of GoD's true and glorious character, will be increasing through eternity. It is now, greater than it was under the Mofaic difpenfation; will be greater when GoD's church fhall fill the earth; greater still at the day of judgment, and continue growing through all the ages of endless duration.

FROM the fubject we may infer,

Ift. ALL, who deny a revelation, on the ground of fufficient natural evidence for the moral perfection of God; allow that, which proves their own guilt and mifery, and leave themfelves without a remedy.

SINNERS are individuals. The object of infinite goodness is the greatest fum of happiness in the whole, and this doth not certify us that all individual finners will be made the moft happy they can be. We could not have known, that one of them would ever have been forgiven, if a revelation had not contained the good news.

PERSONS who deny a revelation, do thereby deny a gospel. From the goodness of GoD, they infer there is no danger for them, and thus live without fear of wrath to come; but they might as well infer, from the infinite goodness of GoD, there never had been any mifery ; which being contrary to fact flows the manner of reafoning to be falfe. Those who reject a revelation, in order to free themfelves from a fear of punifhment to come, and to avoid that holy life which the fcriptures command, becaufe they think there is a fufficiency of natural light concerning GoD's character and the duty of men, ought alfo to remember; that they have allowed enough to condemn themfelves and fhow the justice of their eternal punishment, and have left themselves in a ftate of forlorn mifery and guilt, by denying Gon's word, which alone contains evidence of a redemption thro' the blood of Chrift. Is there natural evidence for the infinite goodnefs and holiness of JEHOVAH? We allow there is. The fame evidence proves men to be finners, guilty beings, who deferve punifhment for rebelling against infinite rectitude. Without the fcriptures they are proved to be guilty, and nothing appears but they must be forever unpardoned. The more this argument is used against revelation, the more certainly and justly the perfons who use it appear to be condemned. It is ftrange, that any who believe a fufficiency of natural evidence, for the perfect holinefs and goodnefs of God, should with to banish a revelation from the world. To help themfelves in one way, they fut out help in another, and leave their own eternity under a most awful gloom. But perhaps such perfons, by the goodnefs of GoD, do not mean his holinefs, justice, and high displeasure with fin. They may hope the goodness of GoD is a perfection distinct from his other moral attributes, and that its tendency is to make every creature happy whether he be holy or unholy, malicious or benevolent. If they have fuch an idea, they are mistaken in the nature of goodness. Goodnefs and holinefs are two general expressions, each of them denoting the whole infinite rectitude of Godhead. All fuch as from inattention to the fubject have thought differently are defired to explain how an unjust being can be good. Is an unjust being good to the perfon to whom he is unjust? Or can we call an unjust being a good moral governor of the universe? Certainly not. In every case, what justice admits, goodness admits alfo, and GOD is good becaufe he is holy, just, true and righteous; and without these he could not be a good being. One way in which the gospel declares GoD's goodness, is by evidencing his justice. He is just to himfelf, maintains his own right, afferts his prerogatives, claims the honor due to him, is just to his law, and to his rules of government in a universe of intelligent beings. If the gospel faved finners, in any way that did not preferve the rights of justice most entire, it would not prove GOD a good being. Justice is not only a part of goodnels, but if one part be more effential than another, this is the bafis on which infinite goodnefs flands.

THERE is room to fuspect, that fome who allow a natural evidence of GoD's goodnefs, do not mean to include in it the justice which condemns and punishes fin; but to fet fuch perfons right, we ought to convince them that infinite goodnels contains condemning justice on impenitent finners; and not relinquish the natural evidence of GoD's perfection to filence their unfounded cavils.

2dly. THE fubject flows the greatness of light which fhineth, and the weighty evidence there is of all moral and evangelical truth.

In the fame proportion as there is evidence of the divine character, there is also of moral truth. What could God have done more to instruct us ? Nature and all its parts are filled to teach us his holinefs. The laws of nature contain much information. Moral good and evil are taught us by caufes and effects in the natural fystem. The fcheme of creation, as it comes to our underftanding, leads up to a GOD, holy and Almighty, who is pleafed with moral virtue, and difpleafed with fin. We cannot look either on the day or night; on the stable earth, the animated fields, or glorious heavens; without beholding evidence of the creator's character, who is the pattern to be imitated. Doth not our confcious unlikenes to him condemn us?

His providential government of nations and individuals teaches the fame truth. The hiftory of kingdoms and men contains a hiftory of GoD's counfels and rectitude. Divine revelation fhines with a brighter light, and teaches us how GoD the Son, came from heaven to earth to prove the holinefs or goodnefs of the Father. Natural and revealed evidence confirm each other, and in union contain the higheft fum of inftruction, which the prefent period of being admits. An increase of evidence for any truth does not fhow, that there was not previously enough to convince an unprejudiced mind. It is often inquired why GoD gives increasing evidence of truth, and how this is equitable in his treatment of creatures. For doing thus he may have many reasons, and there is one that is neceffary in the nature of things. The degree of present evidence often depends on past events. What GOD and men have been doing fince the creation, directs our prefent judgment of his character, and thus there will be an eternal accumulation of evidence, for truth that hath always been witneffed fufficiently, to convince an unprejudiced mind. The ignorance of GoD's character, which there is in the world, comes from the depravity of mens hearts. Evidence will not instruct all individuals in a finful world; for tho' it be fufficient the heart oppofes, and this opposition is against both the light of nature and of revelation.

3dly. The fubject teaches us that all who are finally impenitent will be inexcufable before God. When they are in the prefence of the Holy Judge, as we all shall be after a few moments more ; when their appetites are reftrained by their fituation, and there is no longer a poffibility of poffeffing wordly objects of fin, they will be furprized at their own flupidity while mercy was offered. The greatness of light against which they finned will prove their guilt. Through a confciousness of its being the greatest possible, their mouths will be ftopped, and they will be felf-condemned, as perfons who have finned against nature, providence and revelation. To a perfon in this fituation how dreadful must a profpect of eternity be ! How piercing the reflection, here I exist, and must exist forever, a miserable creature! My heart is at variance with my reafon and confcience, and the conflict must be eternal! Here lies the gnawing worm in my own bosom ! Outward afflictions for such an endless duration would be dreadful, but this inward pain who can bear! Every objection I offer againft GOD or his government becomes evidence of my guilt and mifery. I can neither flee, nor change, nor endure! I accufe myfelf, and ftill love the fin I accufe! If there might be an end but eternity feals my defpair!

IF any in the pleafing fecurity of fin fhould chance to read thefe lines, they will probably clofe the page, call the writer an enthufiaft, and fay; in these days we are not used to such a story, once it would have done, but now it is too late to affrighten men. But stay, my fellow mortal, I beg thee to confider. It is for thy own good this is requefted. Haft thou examined the fub-ject thoroughly? Art thou certain thy own hopes are well founded ? Doth not thy own confcience fometimes upbraid thee, and fay it is poffible this may be true, and if it be, my condition is bad indeed : If thou wert on a death bed, would it be poffible to put by these reflections ? And is it not folly to postpone until the hour of dying, a preparation for eternity? This is of all times the most unfit, and there is little reason to expect, that GoD, who hath been long neglected, will then flow mercy. Let the goodness of GoD, in which we all fhare, lead us to repentance. Our means of instruction are great. If the light be refisted it will be a favor of death unto death; but if faithfully improved, will guide us to manfions of glory in the kingdom of God. AMEN.

SERMON III.

The justice of Gon.

REVELATIONS XV. 3.

-JUST and true are thy ways thou King of faints !

THE justice of GOD is a most amiable perfection.—Our text is part of the fong of Moses and the Lamb.—Moses gave the law, and the Lamb of GOD gave the gospel of peace and reconciliation. The inhabitants of heaven sing an anthem, in which, law and gospel unite to praise GOD for his holines and justice. Great and marvellous are thy works, LORD GOD Almighty! Just and true are thy works, thou King of faints! Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For theu only art boly : For all nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest.

THIS is fung by the holy inhabitants of heaven, introductory to the feven angels going forth with the feven last plagues, the vials of divine wrath, to be poured on a finful world.—We are probably now in the midft of that period, the forefight of which caufed the holy inhabitants of heaven to blefs God.

THE fong concludes with thefe words, All nations shall worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest. The punishing judgments of GOD upon the wicked, are here affigned as a proper caufe for worship and praise.-Those who are perfectly holy, fee a fitnefs that the judgments of GOD fhould be executed upon the wicked, and it is an amiable part of his character that he doth it. Every thing in GoD's character and government is rational and excellent, and there is as much propriety that fin be punished, as that virtue be rewarded with happinels.-In the Revelations made to St. John, we often find the holy faints of heaven, praifing and bleffing GoD, for his judgments on the wicked; and it is folely owing to the depravity of our hearts, that we have not the fame view of his justice, in punishing fin.----I fhall endeavor to illustrate the following doctrinal truth.

THE justice of GOD in punishing fin is an amiable perfection.

ALL are willing to allow that juffice is amiable both in GoD and creatures, when it promotes their interefts; and doth not carry with it either punifhment or a denial of their defires. So far as this, we may find the most finful and felfish, allowing the amiablenefs of juffice. But in fuch cafes, it is not the holy amiablenefs of juffice which they approve; and even their acquiefcence in this divine attribute is as finful, as their own hearts be.—Indeed, it is not the real juffice of GoD, as it exifts in his infinite mind and is difplayed in his government, which they approve, I HAVE limited the truth to be confidered, to the juffice of GOD in punifhing fin; becaufe the anthem of praife, from which our text is taken, appears to be predicated on his punitory judgments; and alfo, becaufe, it is this part of the divine government, against which the corrupt heart most apparently rifes, and judges to be unamiable.

NOTWITHSTANDING the frequency of fuch apprehenfions, in this finful world, we have the beft reafon to determine that none can be faved by the golpel of CHRIST, until they fee the amiablenels of divine juffice, both in forbiding and punifhing fin. Salvation by the grace of GoD in JESUS CHRIST, implies a flate of the heart, which feels the juffice of condemnation, and knows that GoD would be very glorious in punifhing, if he faw it to be beft. With no other views, can the creature fincerely pray, GoD be merciful to me a finner, who have no right to plead, and whom thou mighteft glorioufly fubject to the full penalties of the law.

BEFORE I proceed to fhow the amiableness of divine justice in punishing fin, it is proper, I should make a remark or two to prevent misconception.

WE must diftinguish between the amiableness of divine justice, and the amiableness of the immediate effects produced by it. A punishment confisting in pain, either of body or mind, is the immediate effect produced; and this, in itself, can never be defirable. Pain or unhappiness, considered without regard to the consequences flowing from it, is alike undefirable both to good and bad minds, and to Gop himself.

IT was undefirable to the holy JESUS, in his own cafe; ftill he prayed to the Father, For this caufe came I to this hour, that I fhould fuffer. Father glorify thyfelf, in caufing me to fuffer. His fufferings were undefirable; but he faw an infinite amiablenefs in the juffice of GOD, which brought him to the hour of pain; and it was a most amiable temper in him, cheerfully to fubmit to his passion.

A MAN, in his own cafe, may very rationally prefer a natural evil, for the fake of a greater good to follow. The most holy governor of the universe, may appoint unhappinels to the finner, which in itself is undefirable in his fight; for the fake of a greater good in his kingdom. This is nothing like delighting in misery; and those, who conceive the punishing justice of GoD to be of this kind, have never formed a true apprehenfion of this glorious attribute.

IT is, doubtlefs, a very common thing, for men to have this falle notion of GoD's punitory juftice; and from not inquiring into the true nature of the attribute, they find difficulty in reconciling it with goodnefs.-Goodnefs never delights in unhappinels for its own fake, neither doth punishing justice. In this respect, goodness and juffice are agreed, as on examination, we shall find they be in all others. The reafon men are fo prone to form this false notion of justice, is their own finfulnefs.-They have the depraved exercifes of hatred and revenge, and it gratifies them to fee the pain of their enemies. The holy and good GoD is never, in this way, delighted with the unhappiness of finful creatures. It is not strange, that those who form an opinion of divine justice, on the model of their own bad paffions, should find reason enough to fault it. While their own deformity is hidden from their fight thro' felfishness, they can in another being, fee it to be unamiable, if oppofed to their defires or interests.—We must go to very different fources, to difcover the amiableness of justice; which I shall now attempt, in the three following particulars.

I. THE justice which punishes fin, as it exists in the divine mind, is an exercise of goodness.

II. THE execution of justice produces the best effects in fociety.

III. IT treats the finner according to his true character and deferts.

I. IT is amiable as it exifts in the divine mind, because it is an exercise of goodness. The juftice of GoD, which inclines him to punish, is part of his goodnefs. Tho' it produces different effects, in the condition of the creature who is punished, from what would be by the exercise of grace; still as it exists in the infinite mind of GOD, it cannot be diftinguished from his glorious love to himfelf and his holy kingdom. GOD hath the fame motive to punifh fome finners, as he hath to forgive others. The whole divine rectitude moves towards one ultimate end or object, and neither his counfels or works are divided in their final tendency. One great defign runs uniformly through his eternal counfels, and the execution of them by creation, government, redemption, the glory of his faints, and the punishment of finners. This defign is to make the most happy universe-the greatest fum of holy felicity. The punishment of fin, like all his other works, leads directly to this end. So that justice, as it exists in God, is goodness. Punitory justice is as necessary to make him a being of infinite goodnefs, as his disposition to forgive and glorify repenting finners. This infinite goodnefs and justice hath no private end, or partial defires. He fanctifies and forgives fuch as the general good requires; and leaves and punifhes fome for the fame end. If GOD's general motives be the fame, in the exercife both of punifhment and of grace; his character is as amiable in one as in the other. To omit either would be an infringement on his rectitude, and he would not be a GOD of eternal holinefs.

THE inhabitants of heaven, reprefented in the Vifion of John, had this apprehenfion of punitory juffice; or they would not have broke forth, in a rapturous anthem of praife, on feeing the feven angels go forth, to execute the feven greateft plagues on a guilty world.

II. THE execution of justice, in the punishment of fin, produces good effects in fociety.

It is the good effects or confequences which come from punishment, which cause infinite love to choole it. The benefit of divine judgments, in fuch a flate as the prefent, are very apparent. If there were no punifhment, the earth would be filled with violence.-Sinful men, who are not drawn by love to think of GOD and feek him, would foon forget and give themfelves up to every vice.-Every thing would be directed, by the outbreaking paffions and appetites of wickednefs; and a fense of moral obligation, either to GOD or men, would be almost wholly effaced from the mind.—The condition of things would be wholly unfit for a state of probation .- It is probable, if there were no punishment here, but what is found in the very exercife of finful paffions, men would be more miferable through an excess of their paffions, than they now are with all the judgments inflicted by a righteous GoD ; fo that confidering the nature of fin, the prefent punifhments of GoD, do on the whole leffen the quantity of unhappinefs in the world. This is done by punishment and the fear of it, acting as a restraint on those finful perfons who have no love of God and his law.

BUT we ought not to confine our view of the fubject within these limits.

THE prophet Holea faith, " Thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth." By judgments are here meant punishments. They are a light in time, and will be through eternity. A light, without which, the full excellence of holinefs can be neither known nor felt by creatures. They are a light to teach the holinefs of GoD-the determined rectitude of his nature-his abhorrence of fin-his determination to fupport his moral law and government, by which myriads of creatures are made bleffed. They are a light to fhow the evil tendency of fin, for a great part of the punishment, flows immediately from its very nature and exercife. The greatest happinefs in the created univerfe, is made by feeing the true character of GoD; but how could this be feen, if he did not punish fin. If punishment were feparated from fin, it would go far to involve the moral fystem in darkness, and thus take away the greatest means of intelligent bleffedness.

IF any fuppofe, that the punifhments of another world, are defigned only to gratify fome paffions of the Supreme mind, fimilar to the vengeance of finful mortals; they have indeed formed a debafing opinion both of GOD and his government. Thefe punifhments are defigned to be a fhining light through eternity, and will be neceffary for the beft good of fociety, on the great fcale in which it fubfifts.—Admit the exiftence of fin, and this is a fact which cannot be denied, and punifhment is neceffary for the general glory and good; and the juffice of GOD who inflicts it, is an amiable part of his character. There never will be an inftance of punifhment in the divine government, that is not folicited by the moft benevolent motives. When the attention of men is arrefted by the mighty power of GoD, they will fee this truth fo fully, as to filence those objections which now rife against divine justice. Though the heart may remain in full opposition, the tongue will have no argument to plead; and it will be one great ingredient of misery to have a heart opposed to the Supreme government, without a reafon to shew how it is wrong.

III. THE punishing justice of GOD treats the finner according to his true deferts.

It is known, that if the finner did not deferve punifhment, the divine character would not be amiable in executing it; but there is a full defert of all, that is or ever will be endured by the wicked.

THE finner is oppofed to that holy temper, law, government and practice, which are abfolutely neceffary to make the univerfe moft happy. All the principles of fin are oppofed to focial good, and we can confider the fyftem of intelligence in no other view, than a great fociety, under the government of an infinite king. So much abhorrence, as is due to a fet of principles, which have a natural tendency to deftroy all happinefs; the fame is due to the principles of a finner's heart. And how fhall this abhorrence be expreffed, by a good mind and a good governor, except it be by punifhment? Let the man, who can fhow any other way, come forth and teach the world.

BUT it may be inquired, is it possible the principles of fin should go thus far? Do finners mean this by their vices ? Have they this enmity against God and the universe ?-----Let scripture answer. The friendship of the world is enmity with GOD; whoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. James iv. 4. Supreme love of the world and of felf, is enmity with Gon.-Is not this fupreme love of felf and the world natural to men, or do they love GOD more ? Let their actions tell. Let their daily appearance, their devotion to time and forgetting of God tell. Let their prayerless lives and opposition to the kingdom of CHRIST tell. Let a review of their hearts and the fubjects which have occupied their meditations tell.-Let them confiderately, and in the fear of the Moft High, answer this question ; Have I loved GOD more than all other things with the chief strength of my heart and mind ?-It is enmity and an injury to God to deny him that which the infinite perfection of his nature deferves, or to love the world and ourfelves more than we love him ; and there needs nothing but an extension of these bad affections in the heart, to wish and attempt the highest rebellion against heaven.

BUT do finners mean this in all their evil actions and affections? It is poffible they may not think of this in all they do; yet they mean to do that, which fcripture and confcience tell them to be wrong.—They will purfue this, fo long as it promotes their own defigns; and add opportunity and power to their hands, there would be no check to the immoral difpolition. A luft to injure another, is the very principle which ends in killing; and a denial of one divine right, implies a denial of all. Hence the apoftle James faith, He that offends, againft the law, in one point is guil- ty of all. This is the nature of an unholy temper, and that evil heart which is natural to man. No one will deny that it deferves punifhment, and who can flow that eternal punifhment is beyond the defert? When we confider, that it is a temper directly aimed against an infinite and eternal good, no lefs than the whole happiness of GOD and his kingdom ; that it never ftops in its claims; never gives up the throne to GoD, to whom it is due, but repines and is uneafy; never ceafes coveting, nor can ceafe, until a univerfe is fwallowed up in its defires; that no motive of reafon or equity, no new light of doctrinal information will alter this disposition; these things being conceded, who can defcribe the greatnels of the finners desert of punishment? Desert of punishment, doth not confift in a certain quantity of revenge being due to a certain quantity of fin; but it arifes from the finners relation to a holy GoD, and the great kingdom of intelligence.-By fin he hath loft all claim to good and is exposed to evil : and the evil deferved, is just fo much, as general good requires. When we attend to the nature of fin to deftroy the greatest good, and the infinite object against which it is levelled; human imagination cannot conceive a greater or more durable punifhment, than the public good may require, and GOD who knoweth all things, hath been pleafed to tell us it is without end.

On these grounds, it is fupposed that the juftice of GOD which punishes fin, is an amiable perfection. It is an exercise of divine benevolence; produces the best effects in fociety; and is according to the finners true deferts. The foriptures bear abundant testimony, to the excellence and amiable glory of GOD's justice. They call on men to love and ferve him—to exercise confidence and trust—to fear and praise him—becaufe he is a just GOD. Indeed, if the justice of GOD could be rightly impeached, in the fmalleft instance, it would overthrow the foundation of creatures happiness.

The justice of GoD.

A SERIOUS improvement may be made of this fubject.

1. It teaches us the danger of fin, and the certainty of punifhment on those who do not repent.

IT flows that GOD doth not fpeak capricioufly in his threatenings, nor act under the influence of fuch paffionate hatred as men often feel. If this were the cafe, finners might hope he would relent and paffion fubfide; but as the cafe now is, all the evidence of his being good may be adduced to prove the certain fulfilment of his threatenings. Goodnefs, infinite goodnefs is the fame juffice; which threatens, condemns, and will execute. To what can the finner appeal? If he flies away from juffice, to fome perfection of JEHOVAH which he thinks more mild; infinite love will anfwer, it is I who am executing this, and if I should defist, I could not be good to myfelf, and the immenfe creation around me. My justice, with which you are rightly terrified, is that goodnefs which fpread the heavens, founded the earth, peopled the univerfe, and governs for their happines. There is no perfection in GOD more mild than justice; no compassion different from it, to which the finner who is finally condemned, may address himself for escape.

FURTHER, when the finner comes to fee all thefe truths, as they will at last be exhibited; it will fix the feverity of that part of his punishment, which arifes from felf-accusation, and will complete his despair of a remedy. Tho' he cannot fee the beauty of holinefs, as it is feen by GOD and holy minds; his reafon will be convinced it is the goodness of GOD which passed the fentence, and that the rectitude which condemned him is the foundation of heavenly blifs. As the evidence of GoD's goodnefs increafes to his knowledge, which will probably be the cafe thro' eternity; it will at the fame time be evidence of the perpetuity of his own fentence. The accufations of confcience accompanied with defpair, in fuch a cafe, must be extreme misery. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands even of a good GOD, when he comes forth as a condemning judge; and the terrors grow in proportion to the infinitude of his love. In view of this, GOD in the character of a Saviour addreffing himfelf to prisoners of hope, exhorts us to immediate repentance, and without delay to escape for our lives.

2dly. To affift our felf-examination, it becomes us to inquire, whether the juffice of GOD appears to us an amiable perfection; and if we think it doth, on what ground ?

GoD's whole character appears amiable to the holy. They are not difpofed to feparate his various perfections in refpect of beauty, as men conceive and fpeak of them under different names. His juftice, his fovereignty appear as lovely as his grace. Finite creatures mult confider an infinite mind by parts, and all the parts to a fanctified foul appear lovely alike. He doth not fay, this perfection I admire—of another I am fome afraid —and a third, I wifh were removed from the fupreme nature. Any thing of this kind in our feeling, fhows a want of conformity to GoD, and that his fpirit doth not dwell and reign in us. THE faints of GOD love his juffice, becaufe it is neceffary for his glory and the good of his kingdom; for tho' it may diminish their own happines, it increases the whole.

If we think ourfelves friendly to divine juffice, let us enquire on what ground our friendfhip ftands?—The heart is very deceitful, and fin hath a blinding power. We may have a very ftrong hope, that our own fins are forgiven, fo that juftice will never injure us, and that all its effects will fall on others while we are fafe. If this, be the only reafon of acquiefcing in GoD's juffice, we are hypocrites. A holy approbation of juftice is not altered by any felfifh confideration; but can cheerfully fay this is a glorious attribute, and will forever remain fo, whatever its effects may be in my own cafe.

3dly. IT is neceffary finners fhould fubmit to the justice of GOD in condemning, and fee the fitnels of the fentence he hath paffed, before they can be benefitted by the grace of the gofpel, and accepted thro' CHRIST. They must come as penitents and mourners for fin, and they never can be true mourners for fin, until the justice which condemns them appears right and amiable, and worthy of an infinite and perfect GoD. Coming to GOD and CHRIST, in the gofpel way, is a friendly exercife of the heart-friendly to GOD himfelf-to the Mediator-to his law and gospel-and to his government. The object to which we are friendly, whether it be divine or human, appears amiable. Sinners do not come to CHRIST the Saviour, until he appears glorious in all his perfections; in his justice, as well as his grace. The rifing of our hearts against the fentence of our own condemnation, not only proves our want of holinefs, but a want of that renovation, which muſt precede our coming to CHRIST in a faving way. When finners have feen the fitnefs and the excellency of juſtice, they will loathe themfelves—will mourn for fin—will be pleafed with the goſpel plan—and with the character of Chrift. They will come, receive, truſt, and glorify him; and none of theſe exerciſes can take place, until there hath been a reconciliation of heart to the juſtice of GoD. By theſe obfervations, we may bring our hearts to very ſtrict examination; and all will do it, who have true apprehenſions of the conſequences depending.

4thly. How great will the glory of GOD appear, after the conclusion of the prefent state, when all moral agents in the creation, of whom we have any knowledge, have received their portion !

How glorious in all his attributes-in creating goodnefs-in redeeming grace-in his patience and forbearance with a world of finners-in forgiving, fanctifying and glorifying the guiltyand alfo in the execution of justice. Justice is the attribute with which men are most ready to contend, for they are afraid of it; but it will in the end appear both glorious and good. Enough is now feen to fix deep guilt on the transgreffor, and more will be feen in the progrefs of divine government ; fo that the fong of Mofes and the Lamb will be forever fung. It will be feen, that to be just is to be good; and in the administration of God, these two names of his character are never feparated. All holy creatures will agree in this, not because they delight in pain, or have a pleafure in natural evil, for this is far from their hearts.-It is becaufe they delight in good, and fee the glory of goodness and justice to be the fame.

5thly. THE description that hath been given of divine justice, shows the perfect harmony of the law and gospel.

IT is very common for men to fall into the unfcriptural notion, that the law and gofpel of GOD are in fome way opposed. The reason of fuch an opinion is, that the law condemns finners and the gospel pardons them. This is truth, still the gospel doth not pardon them in a way, which oppofes the law. Grace doth not abound, in fuch a manner, as accufes the nature of juffice. Mercy and truth have met together, righteoufnefs and peace have kiffed each other. Where is the glory of condemning justice, fo fully proved, as by a gospel of grace ? If justice had not been amiable, GOD would not have given his fon to fanctify its claims. If CHRIST had not feen an amiablenefs in the justice of GOD and the law, he would not have borne the curfe on the crofs. The gofpel is a most full display of the glory of the law, and the forgiveness of free grace magnifies condemning justice. Thus GOD glorifies all his perfect-ions! Thus grace and justice will ever harmonize! Thus both the falvation and punishment of finners will make Gop to be adored forever and ever !---- AMEN.

SERMON IV.

The fovereignty of GoD.

LUKE X. 21.

In that hour JESUS rejoiced in fpirit, and faid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes : Even so, Father ; for so it seemed good in thy sight.

THE fovereignty of GOD in the difpenfations of nature and grace, is one of those truths in which all who are good will rejoice. The virtuous delight in it, the evil are opposed to it. The virtuous choose a fovereign GOD; the evil wish him to be removed from the throne. This prejudice against divine fovereignty, shows both the wickedness and folly of finners.—It shows their folly as much as their wickedness; for the only possible hope of transgreations frands upon the fovereignty of JEHOVAH; and if he were not fuch, it would be eternally impossible, that a guilty creature should ever come to the holiness and glory of heaven. 58

Thus our Saviour viewed the doctrine. In fight of it he rejoiced in fpirit, for he faw it to be right, and he always rejoiced in right things; he faw it to be for the glory of GOD, which was dear to him ; he faw it to be the broad, the fure foundation of finners redemption, and that a fcheme of grace could ftand and be executed, on no other truth.-For these reasons he rejoiced in fpirit, and faid, I thank thee, Father, that thou haft hid thefe things from the wife and prudent, in their own opinion; from those who take on themselves to judge better than thy word, and to know by their own reafon what the Lord of all the earth may and will do; from those, who trufting to themfelves and their own works, cannot fubmit to the foul humbling terms of the gospel. I thank thee, Father, that thou hast revealed these things unto babes; unto those who are weak, ignorant and guilty, and in every fense without strength; for fuch are all, whom the fovereign mercy of GOD faves, before they are fanctified and enlightened by his fpirit.

CHRIST might alfo have a fpecial reference to the character of the difciples, who had then received him. They were babes in all external, worldly advantages, compared with the fcribes, pharifees and fpiritual lawgivers of the jewifh nation, from whofe eyes, the glory of CHRIST and the gofpel was hidden by their own fin. To the difciples there was a revelation, through the renovation of their hearts, of the fpiritual glory of GOD—the precioutinefs of CHRIST, and the fitnefs of his gofpel, to redeem finners.

Serm. IV. The fovereignty of God.

efficiency in hiding from fome and revealing to others, and had praifed GoD for this efficiency ; and in thefe words, he traces up the diffinction that was made between men, to the fovereign council of GoD, and acknowledges the fitnefs of it.—Thofe who fee the divine character right, will know it to be a fit and defirable thing, that GoD fhould act fovereignly in all his appointments, and in the diffinctions made between men, in the prefent and future difpenfations of his government.

I SHALL attempt to illustrate the following truth.

THE fovereignty of GOD, in all cafes, is glorious for himfelf, and a reason of rejoicing for creatures.

THE following definition may be given of the divine fovereignty.

It is his all-powerful acting, according to his own will, and by motives derived from within his own mind.

To his purpofe and acting there can be no effectual refiftance, for he is Almighty in all things; and the ineffectual refiftance that is made to his will by finners, arifes from his permiffion, is wholly under his control, and managed by him, in all refpects, as he pleafeth.

THAT GOD hath in fact this fovereign action, and that creatures ought to rejoice in it, are truths to which the holy fcriptures bear the most full testimony; and they are truths which arise from the nature of an infinite being, who is the fole creator and preferver of finite existence.—To fuppose the contrary, would be the fame as to conclude, he is not the fole creator.-The Lord in his word, every where claims this fovereignty to himfelf. The counfel of the Lord standeth forever ; the thoughts of his heart to all generations .--For GOD is in the heavens ; he hath done what foever he pleased.-I form light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil : I the Lord do all these things.-Who worketh all things after the counfel of bis own will. God challenges a fupremacy over the whole creation-the luminaries of heaven and the earth-the feafons-the laws of nature -kings and empires-the minds of men and angels-the good and the bad-the paft the prefent and the future. He speaks of these as his agents, which are purfuing the deftination of his councils; and reprefents in the most forcible language, his high independence of any thing external to himfelf.

The fovereignty of GoD.

HE afferts the fitnels that this fhould be the cafe, and affigns, " Thus faith the Lord" as fufficient reafon, for the higheft creature both to believe and obey.

In comforting his people, he affigns his own fovereignty, as a reafon for their trufting and rejoicing in him forever more; and reprefents their bleffednefs, ftanding upon the independent goodnefs of his nature.

Also in threatening finners with punifhment, its certainty is urged, by his being a fovereign, and by the impofibility of any release from his hand, or foreign influence on his determination.

THE whole law and gofpel harmonize in thefe ideas of divine fovereignty—take this away from the divine character, and it breaks the obligation of the law, and difunites the doctrines of the gofSerm. IV. The fovereignty of Gop.

pel scheme, so that they must become inefficacious for falvation.

THE abfolute fupremacy of GOD, is one of those doctrines, against which the unholy heart naturally rifes.—Pride is mortified; a wicked felfishness is croffed by it; and the finner fees that his only fafety depends on the entire fubmilfion of his will. Further, this fovereignty shows the abfolute necessflity, either of choosing what is not loved, or remaining under GOD's displeafure; fo that the doctrine becomes alarming to his fears.—Hence, as might be expected, hath arisen many objections and misreprefentations of the doctrine; especially, that it gives a gloomy and unlovely view of the divine character, and makes him more an object of dread than of delight.

To difpel the miftake; filence the objections of a bad heart; and more fully flow, that GoD's fovereignty is glorious for himfelf, and a reafonable ground for creatures to rejoice, the following things concerning it ought to be confidered.

1. The fovereign determination and acting of God is not without motive and fystem, nor is it the excess of bad passions.

INDEED, we cannot conceive, that intelligent beings fhould, in any cafe whatever, act without motive; but they may act without fyftem.—By acting without fyftem, I mean acting from the impulfe of prefent palfion, without a regard to what is rational and right.—This, in a great meafure, is the cafe with all finful beings. In ufing the word fovereign, we fhould diffinguifh between its meaning, when applied to guilty finners, and when applied to an infinite and holy GoD.—

The fovereignty of God. Serm. IV.

Sovereignty, in the hand even of a holy creature would not be defirable, becaufe he cannot have knowledge to direct its operations.—Let his heart be ever fo good, it would be dangerous to the univerfe, through a want of knowledge and power to exercife it in the beft manner.

Sovereignty, in the hands of an unholy creature, is dreadful in all refpects ; for he hath neither understanding nor a heart to do wifely. Such fupremacy as evil men often exercife, hath raifed a prejudice against the word in some minds, who would rejoice in the afcription of fovereignty to God, if they understood it right in this high application.-In the fupremacy of guilty men, there is tyranny, oppreffion, a wanton exercise of power according to the prefent impulse of passion, absurdity and misery. Reason is difregarded; right is forgotten, and jealoufy, enmity and rage act in the place of calm deliberation.—There can be no confiftency in fuch a fovereignty as this. Those who act under it know not how to obey or pleafe; or whether they shall meet the capricious smile or the warrant of death. There cannot be the order and confiftency of fystem, in the passions of fin. They flow from a felfish fource, and act from the passion of the prefent moment .--- If omnipotence and infinite knowledge were given to a finful mind, he could not reduce the exercises and practice of fin to a confiftent and safe fystem of action. He never could gain perfect happinefs. Perfect happinefs, arifes from the enjoyment of an object, commenfurate to the capacity of enjoying; but the finner never can find this in himfelf, nor in all the creatures, though they were by an infinite power, fubordinated to his wifhes .- The nature of minds and of the creatures doth not admit

Setm. IV. The fovereignty of God.

it. The fovereignty of a finful creature must neceffarily be dangerous to others, disappointing to himfelf, and without rational defign.

FAR different from this, is the glorious fovereignty of JEHOVAH. He is a GOD of order and fyftem—propofes to himfelf the higheft object, an object reaching thro' an eternity paft and to come—and in all his actions and commands, keeps this object in view, fo that the infinite energy of his working is here centered. There is the most perfect order and fyftem in his fovereignty, and the fame forever. His moral character; his fupreme object, and all his counfels leading to this fupreme and ultimate object, have the whole harmony of reason and order in them. There is nothing that answers to the idea of paffion and caprice, as they are applied to men.

REMOVE imperfection and fin from the word fovereign, in its high application to GODHEAD, and it goes far to flow that his fovereignty, is glorious for himfelf, and ground of rejoicing for creatures.

2. The fovereignty of God is infinite goodnefs.

THE glory and defirableness of the divine fupremacy, depends entirely upon his being a good and holy being. If GoD were an evil being, his fovereignty would be the most gloomy and illboding doctrine, that could be set before his intelligent subjects; but in the same proportion as we have evidence of his holiness, it is matter for rejoicing.

GOODNESS delights in doing good—in doing the most good—in doing the most good with the least degree of evil, that is compatible with the 64 object fupremely fought—and in doing good to the greateft number of individuals, that can be admitted as fharers without detracting from the general fum of bleffednefs. All this will doubtlefs take place under the government of GoD. There will be the greateft good or fum of happinefs with the leaft evil, and extended to the greateft number of partakers, that the nature of things admits. This goodnefs of GoD, will be affifted by infinite power and knowledge.

To fuch fovereignty, what can be objected, or what is there in it unamiable? By this defcription, it is in the beft and most powerful hands, and here every honest and good mind will choose it fhould remain. Evil minds have no right to object. Good minds will not wish to object. They choose fovereign power to be in fuch hands as will make the best use, and apply it to the most good; fo that the fovereignty of GoD is the ground of their rejoicing.

3. The fovereignty of GOD is exercifed without partiality and refpect of perfons, and therefore glorious for himfelf, and fafe for the rational univerfe. In exercifing that power over creatures, which the holy feripture compares to the power of the potter over the clay, making one vefiel to honor and another to difhonor, Gon is moved by motives of general good. In choofing fome to holinefs and falvation thro' free grace, and justly leaving others to perish in their fins, he acts like a good GoD; and the general cause of holinefs and happinefs, is as much promoted by leaving fome, as by pardoning others. In this sense, he is no respecter of persons; that is, doth not treat them differently, thro' any previous or finister attachment to one and aversion to the other; for he grounds his different treatment on a general utility, which includes his own greateft glory, and the highest good of the creation, confidered as a collective and intelligent fystem. Creatures ought to praise GOD for this fovereignty.

4. THERE is no injustice done to any creature by the divine fovereignty.

THE impenitent are not treated contrary to juffice. The redeemed ones of GoD, are accepted by free grace, in a way confiftent with the juffice of GoD and his government. Thofe who are left are rewarded, in all refpects, as juffice requires; according to their temper, and their actions, and as the good of fociety requires; fo that the fovereignty of GoD, hath all the glory of infinite goodnefs and infinite juffice. If creatures cannot rejoice in this, it flows their hearts to be bad, and oppofed to right.

5. THE ignorance which there is, in unholy minds, of the glory of this doctrine, and their being unable to rejoice in it, is no evidence against the truth advanced.

So long as the mind is altogether unholy, it is unable to fee the true glory of any divine perfection or moral truth. A rational conviction of truth doth not difcover its glory.—The apoftle fays, "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them who are loft." He here means the glory of the gospel, and of GoD's character in this manner of treating men.

It is not to be expected that unholy perfons, will either fee the glory of God's fovereignty or rejoice in it. They cannot rejoice, becaufe they are opposed to it; neither doth the mind ever fee amiablenes, in a truth, an event, or a character to which it is opposed. So long as fin a-bounds in the world, it must be expected, perfons enough will be found, to deny the glory of the doctrine advocated; and if it were not thus, fin would contradict its own nature. Let all men be made holy, and conformed to God in a gospel temper, the praise of divine fovereignty would be conftantly on their tongues; and the fupremacy of the divine government, would be the highest ground of their joy.

The fovereignty of God. Serm. IV.

6. The fovereignty of God was defined to be " His all-powerful acting according to his own will, and by motives derived from within his own mind."

It is evidently implied, in the facred reprefentations, that his motives for acting as he doth, are derived from within himfelf. It is in fuch expressions as these, " according to the counsel of his own will-according to his own good pleafure-becaufe it feemed good in his fight"with a valt multitude of fimilar paffages, which carry the human mind, to conceive all motives of divine action, originating in Deity himfelf. And whence could Gon's motives arife, unlefs, it be from within himfelf? Antecedent to all existence beside his own, there could be nothing without himself, to influence him by way of motive. Certainly, therefore, he must find the motive within himfelf to create; to create fuch a fystem as he hath; fuch creatures as exist; and all the circumstances of their existence. If any thing exifted independent of his creating fulnefs, and beyond the reach of his governing control, he might have motives to action, external or without himfelf; but fo long as it is allowed, that all are dependent on him in the most absolute manner, it must also be allowed, that all the motives to his fovereign action, are from within himself. His fovereignty, therefore, is of the most perfect and absolute kind; and the more absolute, the more glorious for himself, and the greater reason for creatures to rejoice.

Serm. IV. The fovereignty of God.

HERE the proud heart objects.

CAN this be caufe of rejoicing, that I am in the hand of a most absolute fovereign? Is this confiftent with my dignity as a rational creature, and a free agent ?----Truly it is. If thy reafon be exercifed right, all its dictates will be in conformity to the fovereign counfel and acting of GOD.—If thy heart be opposed to infinite reason, or prejudices thy reafon, it is the depravity of thy heart, and not the fovereignty of GoD, which degrades, and takes dignity away from thee .--Neither is thy dignity as a free agent leffened. Art thou not as free in finning, as the holy angels and holy men are in loving and obeying GOD? Is not fin thy choice? Doft thou not fin because thou lovest fin? The fovereignty of God will never deftroy thy freedom as a rational agent, but an evil use of this freedom hath made thee bafe, and without repentance, will be the means of thy mifery forever.

6. The fovereignty of GOD, is the ground of all our bleffed hopes of forgiveness, and complete redemption.

THE holy fcripture always traces back the falvation of guilty finners to the free, rich and fovereign mercy of GoD, and to the riches of goodnels within his own mind; to the purpofe which he purpofed before the foundation of the world.

-They fpeak of God, as being moved to exercife kindness for his own mercy's fake, and his own name's fake; and not for the fake of those who are forgiven .- All hope for finners arifes from the divine fovereignty .- Take this away, and the foundations of the gospel are overturned. Where elfe can the hopes of a guilty finner fland? Does he deferve falvation ? Hath he merited deliverance by fuch coftly means, as the gospel reveals? Can he fave himfelf by paying a price ? Can he fanctify himfelf? Can he make any claim, or fay it would not be just in GOD to leave him in the mifery of his fin? All these questions must be answered in the negative; fo that nothing but the fovereignty of divine goodnefs remains, as a reafon for hope. Well might JESUS CHRIST rejoice in fpirit, confidering the fovereignty of GOD, which hath revealed truth and grace to the babes of his flock.-Well may the church fing the praise of God's fupremacy, and fay, The Lord reigneth let the earth rejoice, and let the multitude of the isles be glad. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's fake. Our God is in the heavens; he hath done what soever he pleased.

THE fovereignty of GOD must therefore be confidered, as glorious for himfelf, and matter of rejoicing for creatures.

WE may improve what hath been faid on this fubject, to try the flate of our own hearts.

Ift. CAN we rejoice in the divine fovereignty, and fay as our Saviour did, I thank thee Father, for fo it feemed good in thy fight !

IF the fovereignty of GoD be according to reafon; if it be holy, just and good; if it feeks the greatest fum of happiness in the kingdom of Intelligence; if it be all the hope of fallen and guilty creatures, every good heart must rejoice in it, and all feelings of opposition discover a criminal badnefs.

By this rule of trial the holy and unholy heart, will come into view. In examining ourfelves we ought to let the rule have its full extent. Our submission, to be a gracious one, must extend to all events of the divine government .- An unholy heart may rejoice in its own gain and pleafure, and of courfe in a fovereign providence; which in all things gratifies a worldly ambition and love .- Our Saviour faid, If ye love them who love you, what reward have ye? What evidence is this, that ye are delivered from the felfish corruption of human nature? So we may fay, with refpect to fubmiffion. If ye cheerfully fubmit to that fovereign providence, which gratifies all your earthly wifnes, and fubmit no farther; what evidence is this of a holy love to GoD, or a delightful reverence of his nature ? Gracious fubmiffion extends to all events ; both to profperity and adverfity; to afflicting evils, and the frowning difpensations of heaven; to pains, reproaches and poverty, if it be GoD's pleasure to appoint them. These trying events are as much the direction of infinite rectitude, as earthly bleffings are; they are as right; they are as neceffary for God's glory, the good of his creatures, and the best government. He appoints them, not through a pleafure in looking on affliction, feparately confidered, but becaufe they are right and best; and the fame reasons which influence his righteous will to appoint, will make a righteous creature rejoice in his fovereign determination.-If our hearts are good, the lovereignty of God, in its whole extension, will appear to us glorious for him; and best for the universe; neither will afflictions change our fentiments, or ruffle our hearts.

THIS opens to our understanding, one of the many reasons, why a GoD of infinite wisdom hath appointed fo many afflictions to his people. —It affists them in examining their own state, and if they be fincere, gives strength and peace to their hopes. The day of affliction is much the best time for felf-examination, and is commonly a feason of most lively exercise in grace. Therefore the apostle faith, "We glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not associated, because the love of GoD is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

2. IF our hearts are opposed to the fovereignty of GoD, it shows us to be in a state both finful and miserable.

IT must be finful, either to result or distrust a fovereignty that is always right. It is alfo a most miserable state to be in. What more miserable, than to be opposed to that irressible counsel and power, by which the universe is governed? To feel a will, rising against the divine will; which cannot be changed or fuccessfully refisted? Do we not all know there is misery in a disappointed will, and in beholding a supreme government, in all its operations acting counter to our defires? This must be the misery of those who oppose the fovereignty of God; neither can they avoid the unhappines. They are in his hand; they depend on him for their all; their result of the suprement of the suprement of the super state of the suprement state of the super state of the s time to fucceed, he can in a moment difarm them of their weapons, and cover them with confufion. A confcioufnefs of thefe truths, muft make the minds of finners very miferable. This is one of thofe fources of forrow which are thick planted, in the nature of things, of fociety, and of the human mind, for the punifhment of fin. There is room enough in the nature of things, as they at prefent exilt, for GoD to inflict a punifhment on tranfgreffion, equal to all the threatenings of his word; and obferving this natural preparation for punifhment, is a ftrong argument for the truth of revealed threatenings.

Serm. IV.

3. To object to the fovereignty of GOD is an implied rejection of the whole gofpel plan of falvation.

ALL our knowledge of gofpel redemption, is derived from the holy fcriptures, which uniformly reprefent this deliverance to be from the fovereign mercy of GOD. He hath mercy on whom he will have mercy. By grace ye are faved, and a gift of grace mult be at the fovereign option of the giver, and by motives derived from within himfelf.

MEN are often willing to have fome gofpel benefits, if they can attain them without those doctrines from which they flow. The benefits would be agreeable, while the doctrines and duties from which they come are undefirable to their hearts. But is it not folly, to attempt a feparation of these things, which infinite wisdom hath joined together; or can we expect fuccess in the attempt? The gospel is a most glorious scheme of wisdom and goodness; a superstructure which stands on many pillars, one of which being taken away the whole falls.

IF we place human merit in the room of an atonement; or deny the neceffity of perfonal holinefs; or the need of the fpirit to fanctify; or the fovereignty of GOD thro' the whole work of deliverance, the true gofpel fcheme is broken in pieces, and the hope of falvation thro' a Redeemer falls with it. All must foon appear before GoD, and all wifh to come into his prefence, with the best hope of acceptance; and is it not folly to mutilate the fcheme of divine wifdom, when by this, its whole efficacy for redemption is deftroyed. Many who are willing to be chriftians on their own terms, fhrink back from the fovereignty of GOD, and do not feem to confider, that by thus. doing, they cut themfelves off from the benefits of grace, and that it is out of man's power to give a new gospel, or change from the letter of fcripture, which is already given. If God's fovereignty be right, he will not be argued out of his own prerogative, or fuffer the purpofes of his counfel to be moved by the darkening of words.

CALLING the doctrine a hard and uncomfortable one, will not alter the cafe. We know that it is uncomfortable enough to the proud mind; to the finful heart; to the unholy man under whatever defcription of vice he falls, to think he is in the hand of a GoD fovereignly holy. But whence doth the uncomfortablenefs arife, from his own unholy felf, or from the holy fovereignty of GoD? Doubtlefs from the former. Let his reigning fin be removed, and the doctrine will be uncomfortable no longer. Reigning fin being removed he is become a chriftian indeed, and Serm. IV. The fovereignty of God.

greatly rejoices in a gospel of fovereign grace, and that JEHOVAH will forever be supreme.

4thly. THE fovereignty of GOD, is neceffary to make the gofpel redemption fafe and certain, for those who receive it.

THE certainty of falvation now flands on GoD's own nature, and his acting by motives derived from within himfelf. This being rejected, there is no other fo fure ground of fafety. Placed on the creature's own goodnefs it would be unfafe indeed. Placed on an action, which is to be guided by motives derived from the creature, is making it equally unfafe. After the most thorough examination, we can find no other fafe ground of hope, but the fovereignty of GoD. In this therefore, let us rejoice; and if we do not rejoice, let us know that our hearts are wrong. May GoD continue to reign, and bring us to be glad in his g overnment.——AMEN.

SERMON V.

On God's acting for his own glory.

ISAIAH Xliii. 7.

-For I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

THE fubject to which these words apply may be learned from the seven first verses of the chapter, which I will repeat.

BUT now, thus faith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Ifrael, fear not; for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine. When thou paffeft thro' the waters, I will be with thee; and when thro' the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest thro' the fire thou shalt not be burnt; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy GoD, the boly One of Ifrael, thy Saviour: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee. Since thou wast precious in my sight thou hast been honorable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life. Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy feed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; Even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

THE whole paffage is a promife to the church, and one of the most glorious recorded in holy fcripture ; in which GOD declares himfelf, to be the creator, redeemer and protector, of his people. The title of creator, which GoD here claims to himfelf, particularly applies to the forming of his church, and the fanctification of those individuals who compofe it. It does not mean his original creation of the univerfe, but that new creation which finners must experience before they belong to the true Ifrael or church of Gon: The word created is used in the fame fenfe, as by the apostle in the following passage-" For we are his workmanship, created in CHRIST JESUS unto good works." The change in mens hearts by the fpirit of GoD, is often compared to the original creation of the universe, and the making of light, where before, there was darknefs.

In the paffage recited, GOD declares his own fpecial agency in forming his church, thus faith the Lord that created thee—his right in thofe who belong to it, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine—he promifes efficient protection, when thou paffeft thro' the waters I will be with thee, when thro' the fire thou shalt not be burned; fear not I am with thee—he also promifes a great increase both in extension and numbers to his church, I will bring thy feed from the cast, and gather thee from the west; I will fay to the north, Give up; and to the fouth, Keep not back; bring my fons Serm. from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even every one that is called by my name. In my text which immediately follows, GoD declares his defign in this great and wonderful work, For I have created him for my glory. I have formed my church, and the moral character of those who compose it, for my glory.

It is clearly a fcriptural truth, that all which God does, is for his own glory. For this he created the world, made angels and men, and governs the whole. For this he introduced the glorious fcheme of redemption, and will carry it into full effect. Therefore he told Ifrael, when he promifed deliverance and fanctification; Not for your fakes do I this, faith the Lord GoD, be it known unto you. But I had pity for my holy name; which the house of Israel had profuned among the heathen whither they went. Therefore, fay unto the house of Israel, thus saith the Lord GOD, I do not this for your fakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy name's fake. In granting the promifed favor, God wrought for his own glory .- To display the riches of the glory of his grace, is often mentioned as his defign in the work of redemption.-When he comes to close the state of trial on earth, and judge the world, it will be done, that he may " be glorified in his faints and admired in them that believe."-There is no need of repeating texts, to prove all that GOD does is for his own glory, for the diligent reader of the fcriptures must have noticed them.

FURTHER, creatures are directed to feek the glory of GOD in all they do. Whatfoever ye do, do all to the glory of GOD. For ye are bought with a price : therefore glorify GOD in your body, and in your fpirit, which are GOD's. Though CHRIST fuffered for the falvation of finners, he ftill defcribes his active obedience and his fuffering to be for the glory of GOD. All holy exercise in GOD himfelf, in the Redeemer, and his people, agree in being defigned for the divine glory; and this may be a rule, for the trial of our gracious fincerity in all we do.

IT is doubtless true, that in all GOD hath done, or ever will do in the creation and government of the universe, he feeks his own glory; and for justifying any part of his conduct, it will be fufficient to fhow, he was glorified thereby. In doing thus he is not a felfifh being, as creatures are, when they feek themfelves only; but does it in infinite benevolence to himfelf, and the intelligent created kingdom, which flows out from his will. In feeking his own glory, he purfues the most direct means to make himself happy, and give the greatest happiness to creatures; fo that there is nothing of the nature of felfifhnefs in the fupreme mind, though the action of his government is calculated to glorify himfelf. This is a fubject worthy of most ferious attention, both as it fhows the reafonableness of divine government and law; and convicts finners of great guilt in denying to glorify GoD, and in murmuring against him when he glorifies himself.

I WILL attempt an explanation of the following points.

I. WHAT is meant by GOD's doing all things for his own glory.

II. I WILL explain the reafon, why GOD makes his own glory the rule of his action.

III. THE divine acting for his own glory, is the only poffible exercise of infinite goodness.

IV. THE great truth, that GOD in all things acts for his own glory, gives us a high conception of the amount of happiness there will be in the intelligent universe, in GOD himself, and the creation under his government.

I. WHAT is meant by GOD's doing all things for his own glory.

THE glory of GOD fometimes means his effential glory, or the unchanging fulness and perfection of his nature, which hath been the fame from eternity, and can never be increased or diminisched.

AN infinite glory, or fulnefs of perfection both natural and moral, is effential to the fupreme JE-HOVAH. He hath power, wifdom and goodnefs to the greateft degree. And if he had not thefe, at all times, he would not be GoD. Is the fame yefterday, to day and forever; and as great and good in one period of duration as in another. This is the effential glory of GoD, and cannot be altered in any fenfe by the fervices of creatures.

GOD does not any thing to increafe the effential glory of his nature, but all his counfels and works flow out from that glory, and are an exprefion or notice by which it is made visible to his creatures. Therefore in faying GoD hath done all things to promote his own glory, it is not meant to increase his own effential greatness, or fulness. Independent of all, he ever hath and ever will exist, the most bleffed and glorious JE-HOVAH. The things that have been, that now are, and that will be, are GoD's eternal fulness of glory exercised in a wise creation and a holy government.

As GOD doth not increase his own effential glory, by his wonderful works and Almighty action; much lefs can creatures do it. If by any of our. fervices, we expect to increase divine bleffedness, or the honor of his majesty existing in himself, we are greatly deceived, for no such thing can be done.

2dly. By the glory of GOD, the feriptures most commonly mean his declarative glory.

THE declarative glory of GOD is the difplay of his effential glory, and it is this which he feeks by all that he does in the works of creation, providence and redemption; also it is this, which holy creatures feek, in all their words and actions. The Lord GoD made the worlds, he governs them, and he redeems guilty finners to difplay himfelf, and the fulnefs of power and love, which are effential to his nature. The heavens declare the glory of GOD. They do not increase the effential fulness of his nature; but display or manifest it. His effential glory is the cause; the created heavens are the effect, and the greatnefs of the effect, manifests the greatness of the cause. This manifestation, is glorifying GOD declaratively, and is done by all his works.

NATURAL creation flows the fulnels of the creator's nature, and his providence is a continuation of the fame difplay. The work of redemption glorifies GoD more than creation, by containing a fuller difplay of what he is ; the plenitude of his goodnels, and the nature of feveral perfections, which are all comprized in this general name. The more plainly divine truth, juffice and mercy are evidenced to the underflanding of creatures, the more GoD is glorified ; and this is principally done, by the purchase and application of redeeming grace. This great work of love brings the effential glory of GODHEAD Serm. V.

It is the declarative glory of GoD which creatures are required to feek. Our obedience, love and praife, are a declarative acknowledgment of GoD's infinite fulnefs, by which he is entitled to the fervice of creatures. Thus the Lord acts for his own glory in whatever he does; and this is the motive of all holy exercife in creatures. To glorify GoD, is the thing moft defired by holy beings; and tho' finful creatures do not feek this; through his overruling wifdom, their exiftence and all which they do and fuffer, will be made to promote this end. The manifeftation of GoD's effential glory will increafe thro' eternity, and thus a foundation is laid for increafing bleffednefs in the univerfe of holy creatures.

II. I AM to explain the reafon, why GOD makes his own glory the rule of his action.

THE reafon GOD feeks his own glory in all he does, is to make his own happinefs, and the happinefs of the created univerfe the greateft it can be. Seeking his own glory is an exercife of infinite benevolence to himfelf and his kingdom; and as truly to his kingdom as to himfelf. The phrafe, making his own happinefs the greateft it can be; is not meant to imply an increafe of divine bleffednefs, as the difplay of his nature increafes, neither doth it mean a defect of happinefs in any paft period of duration, for GOD hath been infinitely bleffed from eternity in the knowledge of himfelf, and in the foreknowledge of thofe difplays, by which he doth now, and ever will, continue to fpread happinefs around him. Though the infinite bleffednefs of GoD, and the greateft happinefs in his intelligent kingdom, are not practically feparable, as will appear further on ; yet it may affift our weak minds in conceiving fo great a fubject, to confider them feparately. I will begin with the happinefs of creatures. When we have feen how GoD's feeking his own glory, in all he does, makes the greateft poffible amount of created good; it will lead us better to conceive, how it conflitutes his own infinite bleffednefs.

1. God feeks his own glory in all he does, that he may make the greatest possible created happines.

LET it be kept in remembrance, that feeking his own glory, means his declarative glory; that it is diplaying, manifesting, or acting out the internal glory of his own nature.

WITHOUT this, there could have been no creation; no existence of finite minds, to know and be happy, for all creation is the fulness of GOD acted out. So that our being, our power of acting, our capacity for knowing and becoming happy, depend entirely on GOD's glorifying himfelf. There could be no happiness of creatures, without an existence to perceive, to feel, to act and to receive.

FURTHER. The happinels of creatures, depends on having an object of enjoyment; and this could not be, unlefs GoD glorified himfelf, or made a difplay of the fulnels in his own infinite nature.

IN acting for his own glory, GOD hath made innumerable objects and fet them before our understanding. GOD himfelf, is the only object adSerm. V.

equate to the utmost defires of the created mind : and he is known, only by his acting for his own glory, by which he manifests his effential fulness. So that all created happiness, depends in the most abfolute fense, on God's feeking his own glory. If he had not done this, or brought his eternal fulnefs, into action and communication, there would have been no created being, or knowledge or object of enjoyment. The objection, which finful men feel, against his acting in the most fovereign manner for his own glory, if it could fucceed, would extend further than they wifh, and ftop in nothing, fhort of the utter extinction of created being .- All divine works of creation, and redemption, through time and eternity, will be a difplay of the glory and effential fulnefs there is in the Supreme Godhead. Enmity against this difplay, is in fact, enmity against GOD and the universe; against existence, knowledge and happinels. The evil of fuch a temper must be the greatest possible.

2. In doing all things for his own glory, GOD hath a primary regard to his own happines.

THE effential moral glory or fulnels of Gon, confifts in love or communicative goodnels. His benevolence to himfelf, is in proportion to the measure of his nature, and must therefore be infinite. Being good in his own nature, and a difposition to do good cannot be feparated, or perhaps they are the fame thing; for doing good is an exercise of being good.

How can a being of infinite perfection, benevolence and energy in action, do good to himfelf?

It cannot be by increasing his own fulness, for that is already infinite, and admits no increase. Doubtless one way of doing good to himfelf, is by communicating from, or acting out his fulnefs, in the existence, knowledge, holinefs and happinels of creatures. This communication of himfelf is acting for his own glory. The bestowment of good around him, is doing good to himfelf, becaufe it satisfies his benevolence : and the fatisfaction of his benevolence is his happinefs. His own happinefs in communicating good is as much greater than all the happiness of created minds in receiving, as the infinitude of his glorious nature, exceeds the collected quantity of their finite existence. So that it follows, GOD is always doing good to himfelf, and fatif-fying his own benevolence, which is his happiness, when he communicates good to others : and the proportion of good which he doth to himfelf, is according to his infinite nature. GoD's doing all things for his own glory, implies and is the very exercife of his infinite benevolence, to himfelf and to created existence-displaying his own glory, is the only way in which his benevolence can act for its own fatisfaction ; and without the difplay he would deny his own bleffednefs, and there would be no creatures to exift and be happy.

WE therefore fee why GOD always feeks his own glory. It is to perpetuate his own bleffednefs, and enjoy his own fulnefs. He doubtlefs ought to have the highest and a primary regard to himfelf in this, becaufe he is an infinite being; and the prefervation of his own happinels is the greatest possible object, which can be lought by a holy love.

IT also appears, that the bleffedness of Godhead and the greatest happiness of creatures never can be separated.

THOUGH we can conceive and fpeak of them as diffinct, and it affifts our weak power of conception to do thus, they cannot be practically feparated; for the bleffedness of God confists in doing good to himfelf, by the communication or difplay of glory from his own fulnefs, thus making happiness around him; and the happinefs of creation confifts in beholding, adoring and enjoying the difplay. It is thus, that benevolence makes an unchanging and eternal union, between JEHOVAH and his holy creatures. They are united in character or temper; they are united in the love of happines; they are united alfo in the means of happinefs, for the means by which God enjoys himfelf, are the only means by which creatures can be happy.

III. The divine acting for his own glory, is the only poffible exercise of infinite goodness.

THE heart of man, in its natural unholy flate, is opposed to the glory of GOD. There is a dif-like of him because he glorifies himself, and an enmity against the command which enjoins all creatures to feek his honor, in whatever they do.

IT has been faid in contradiction to truth, that to represent Gon doing all things for his own glory, is defcribing him to be a felfish being.

THOSE who make this reprefentation in order to difgrace a truth, which either they do not love, or understand; show great ignorance, in what benevolence and felfifhnefs confift, and that they have not yet attained just ideas of this high and glorious fubject. They judge the nature, and measure thequantity of divine benevolence, on the scale of their own selfiss and pride. Such perfons, generally, have not a true idea of what is meant by God's doing all things for his own glory; but fuppole it to be fomething that is fimilar to their own engroffing temper. They feel their own finiteness, and wilh to extend their quantity of existence, their power, influence and possesfions ; they feek great things for themfelves above their worth; their actions are all for perfonal exaltment. This is felfishness indeed, and this they transfer from themfelves to GoD; and then call it reproachful. They do not fee the reproach in themfelves; but after it is unjustly ascribed to the divine character, they can see it to be wrong. Such ought to be instructed, that Gon's acting for his own glory, is wholly another thing.

HE knows his own fulnefs, and cannot wifh it to be greater. Neither the quantity of his being, nor his power, nor influence, nor possessions can be increased. Infinite cannot with an addition to itfelf, nor a higher rank, nor a greater plenitude of glory than is possessed. The divine acting in all things for his own glory, is acting out or communicating from his own fulnefs. This is directly contrary to engroffing or felfifunefs. It is giving of his own, to others, both their existence and their happines; and not taking from them, for the purpole of felf-advancement, what was independently theirs.

Bur, replies the objecting heart, by feeking his own glory, God makes himfelf happy or enjoys himfelf, and this is his principal motive ; and is not this felfifhnefs? I anfwer, is it possible to pleafe a heart which can make this objection? The objector will doubtless allow, the quantity of God's existence, his energies of action, and his capacity of bleffedness to be infinite, and there.

fore greater, than the fum of created existence and its felicity ever can be. He must also allow that happines in Deity is as valuable as in a creature. Confequently God's own happines, ought to be his principal motive; and no reasonable objection can be made against it, unless from the manner of his happines.

AND what is the manner of his happines? It is not by engroffing, but communicating; not by taking to himfelf, but giving away. It is by giving to the objector his existence, and capacity for being happy; and if he will accept it, the eternal glory of heaven. Doft thou ftill object, and call GOD felfish in making himself supremely happy by doing good? If thou doft it fhows the bitternefs of thy heart, and an implacable hatred against all happiness that is not thine own. The objection fhows the exceeding finfulnefs, and irreconcileable and deftroying nature of fin, and that it is as the apostle teaches, Enmity against Goz. While finners endeavour to hide their enmity, and often deceive themselves fo as to think they have it not, their caviling against GOD and his government prove its existence. The objection, that by feeking his own glory, in all things, God is felfish; is fo far from having truth or force, that this is the only way in which he can be benevolent. If he did not communicate good from his own glory, and enjoy himfelf in doing it, he would instantly be called malevolent or felfish. He does it and is infinitely happy, and still the fame objection is continued. There is no way to pleafe the finner, but by joining his own endeavours to put himfelf in the place of GoD.

IV. THE great truth, that GOD in all things acts for his own glory, when it is justly underftood, gives us a high conception of the amount of happiness there will be in the intelligent universe, in GoD himself, and in the creatures under his government. Our conceptions, on this subject, must fall below the reality; and language must fall below our conceptions. GoD's complacence and delight in the fulness of his own being; his benevolence to his own nature; his happiness in communicating and doing good, whereby, if the expression may be used, his own eternal fulness is multiplied to himself; all prove his infinite blessed.

THE communional bleffednefs of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoft, in the divine fulnefs, and in the ocean of good, which diffufively flows from himfelf in the production and bleffednefs of created exiftence; is a fubject on which the finite mind can but feebly look. The bleffednefs of God is as incomprehenfible as his nature.

How great must be the amount of happines in the holy intelligent creation! We can learn its greatness better from confidering GoD, than from any speculation on the nature of creatures. Looking on the nature of creatures, how imperfect and dependent! On the nature of men, how undeferving and guilty! Confine the view here, without going higher, all is gloom, weakness and wretchedness! But raife the prospect higher, and as the Creator and Redeemer come in fight, the light beams, and glory and bleffedness fpread over the holy creation, whether it be composed of those who retain their primeval rectitude, or fuch as have been new created by the spirit of CHRIST.

FROM the fulnefs of GOD let us learn the fulnefs of created blifs. The happinefs of creatures is made by GOD, made for himfelf, made worthy of his infinite fulnefs, made worthy of being the means by which he enjoys his own plenitude of love. How aftonifhing then muft the fum of created peace be! A fum eternally increafing! Tho' it can never be infinite, it is that, by which, infinite goodnefs is expreffed, and infinite benevolence enjoys itfelf. Gon's benevolence to himfelf, is the proper meafure of that amount of bleffednefs, to which the holy creation is ever approximating; and tho' a fixed period can never be affigned, in which it will become ftrictly infinite, yet the fubject, in this vaft extension, is as really incomprehensible by us, as the nature of GODHEAD.

THIS is the confequence of our Lord's doing all things for his own glory. It is the natural fruit of benevolence, by which he is difpofed to grant, and actually enjoys himfelf in communicating good. Confider the excellent nature of benevolence ! Compare it with malevolence or felfifhnefs; for felfifhnefs and malevolence are really the fame both in their nature and confequences, and as men commonly ufe the words, there is no difference, except in the ftrength of evil exercife.

SELFISHNESS grafps all for itfelf; it knows no good but felf-advancement; takes no delight in communicating or doing good to others, but envies their bleffednefs and hates their profperity, unlefs a perfonal advantage be derived from it. This is the depravity of human nature, and the embryo of those future torments prepared for all the ungodly.

SELFISHNESS is malevolence; and malevolence, in its increase, by the most unalterable laws of nature, goes far in conflituting the mileries of the world to come.

TURN from this, and behold the excellent nature and fruits of that benevolence, which is the moral fulnefs and bleffednefs of GoD himfelf, and the holy creation. This holy love, in the first instance, enjoys all its own internal fulnefs, and then enjoys itself again in a diffusive communication, which is made without leffening its own ftore. Few perfons have confidered this fubject fufficiently to fee how benevolence multiplies happinefs. Take, as an example, the mind of a holy creature, filled with the spirit of love from GoD. Tho' he be in himfelf frail, of limited powers and knowledge, and a limited capacity of perfonally receiving divine bounties; still how amazing the field of happinefs, opened before him. First, his own perfonal wants are completely fupplied-every thing, which his rectified heart defires, is given in the utmost fulness, he can receive. He can fay, my nature, my whole heart and mind is filled-the veffel can perfonally hold no more good, than GOD hath poured into it, and will continue to pour thro' eternity. It will be allowed, this is a happy creature, and that taking into confideration, the eternity thro' which all his wants will be fupplied, his fituation is bleffed indeed. But is this a just or complete description of his bleffednefs? By no means. His benevolence still multiplies happiness to him. He loves the happiness of his neighbour as his own, and in beholding his good, re-enjoys all the bleffednefs a finite mind can receive; and in traverfing an immenfe creation of holy beings, every one he meets, like a glafs, reflects back on his heart, a good which he enjoys, equal to the fatisfaction of his own perfonal wants. How different is the meeting of two envious, or of two benevolent minds?

Serm. V.

The envious fpontaneoufly kindle into all the rage and torment of hell. The benevolent reciprocate a divine bleffednefs, and each brings with him, an ingredient of heaven for his brother—each is happy in his own fupply—equally happy in his brother's good. They join in transport on beholding the Redeemer's kingdom. They behold JEHOVAH, whofe name is love, pouring forth from himfelf an ocean of felicity. An infinite nature ! Infinitely happy in doing good to himfelf, by the communication of good.

THESE are the profpects fet before the children of GOD, who are redeemed from among men by the blood of CHRIST, and fanctified by his holy Spirit. It hath not entered into the heart of unholy men, to conceive this bleffednefs. Their own want of benevolence, disqualifies them for conceiving the length, and the breadth, and height of the love of GOD. All this is prepared, and freely offered by fovereign mercy to his repenting enemies; prepared for them while enemies, and hating both his character and government. O the aftonishing love of God! The greatness of the riches of his grace! Looking on the guilty character of men, we are ready to fay it is impoffible fuch grace fhould be; but it is by looking on GoD himfelf and the gift of his Son, that we fee the poffibility of falvation. I fhall conclude this difcourfe with fome inferences.

1. None but a most wicked heart, can be opposed to God's doing all things for his own glory.

AGAINST this doctrine of revelation men have a natural enmity. Many do not obtain just doctrinal knowledge of the truth, and are thus ex-pofed to be carried away with the cavils of error. A multitude more, will increase in opposition as the truth comes into fight. Where there is a wrong heart, doctrinal knowledge will not change, but increase the bitterness of its exercise. Selfishness and benevolence cannot agree. They are two mafters of the heart, of opposite natures and tendencies.—One is darknefs, the other light; one is the principle of heaven, the other of hell. The divine acting for his own glory, in all things, has been fhown to be an exercife of benevolence : fo that every good heart must rejoice in it. The enemy of this truth, is the enemy of happinefshe is the enemy of God's happines, which confifts in acting out his own love-the enemy of true happinefs in creatures, which arifes from beholding and receiving the communications that iffue from the uncreated fountain of goodnels.---What is more wicked, than to be thus the enemy of GoD, and the best interests of the creation. No plea can justify, no pretence can excuse this temper. The finner's own mouth must be shut, when the whole truth, in this point, is feen.

WHEN men are convicted of a felfish temper, or of an unwillingness that GoD should feek his own glory; it is furprizing with what fecurity they will answer, felfishness is natural to man, and none are free from it. This is allowed to be true, and a very threatening truth it is to finners; but to what doth it amount? Is it a justification? No. Is it an argument there is any right or any fafety in this temper? Not at all. It amounts to a condemnation of all men; is a confession of their demerits; a justification of GoD in condemning; and an avowal of the first principles of eternal misery, in every mind of man, unless fovereign, fanctifying power is pleafed to deliver.

2. IF GOD doth all things for his own glory, we have no right to think ourfelves in a fafe ftate. until our hearts and actions are governed by the fame motive. A right to falvation stands in a covenant union with JESUS CHRIST, which always implies a union of moral character, and conformity to God in holinefs. The Spirit of CHRIST gives to his people grace for grace ; gracious affections corresponding to his infinite moral perfections. God and his people, love the fame objects-have fimilar defires-promote the fame interests, and have a common fource of happinefs. To make them his people, he communicates from his fulnefs, a benevolence like to his own, and a defire to promote his glory, as he has to glorify himfelf. If we have not this defire to promote his glory; if it be not a principal motive with us in our actions, we are not real christians, and he will not in the end own us for his. The disciples of CHRIST love their master's glory, more than their own earthly pleafure; and when it is feen how his honor and the interest of his kingdom may be promoted, without confulting flefh and blood or a corrupt heart, they immediately fet themfelves to glorify their Father in heaven. Men may go a great length, in the visible duties of religion, without any intention to glorify God. They may act wholly with the fervile defign, to escape the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched. With this view, they may give alms of all they posses, and beggar themfelves to feed the poor, while they never mourned-in fecret for the difhonor done to GoD in the world. Those who think they are christians, and going fast to heaven, if they have not often put the queftion to themfelves, will this action be for GoD's glory? Or how can I diffionor him lefs and glorify him more? are not fuch christians as will bear the trial of the judgment day. To see the glory of God difplayed will be a heaven to the holythe more it is displayed the more joyful their heaven will be, and if his glory be now forgot, it demonstrates them destitute of the preparative principles of eternal glory. A vifible life of religion is neceffary evidence of being in a fafe ftate; but if any think they have this and do not feel an ardent defire to glorify GoD, they are as a founding brafs and a tinkling cymbal, and all their works will profit them not. The people of GoD, feel a most sensible pleasure in the promotion of God's glory; and they can endure trials with great patience, and even glory in tribulation, that the divine name may be honored. Let us examine and prove ourfelves by this rule. If there were more examination and prayer, there would be fewer weak and doubting christians, than we now find. The fincere would gain new evidence by the increase of their graces; and many who think themfelves fafe, would detect their own hypocrify. Let all rejoice that GOD reigns to glorify himfelf, and may this be our bleffedneis. AMEN.

ROMANS iii. 9, 10.

-For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under fin; as it is written, there is none rightcous, no, not one.

THE depravity of mankind, is a truth very clearly revealed in the holy feriptures. There is also a general conviction of natural conscience that this is the cafe; a conviction which extends far beyond any knowledge of the chriftian revelation, and among nations of every religion, which hath been received by any confiderable number of men. This flows the christian revelation, to agree with the natural notions of men, and with natural confcience. Whoever, will take pains to examine the heathen fystems of religion, will find they are not confined, to fuch dectrines and tervices as only imply praile; or to fuch parts of prayer, as imply only praife and a fente of dependence, which would be the cafe if they had no confciousness of fin. Their religion, alfo, includes fomething that is defigned for expiation—to appeafe an injured being and make peace with him. This flows the natural fenfe of confcience, that men are finful and guilty creatures, to be deeply written on the mind. The few fcattered inftances, of men whofe confciences are feared as with a hot iron, can be accounted for, on natural principles, without difcrediting the general truth ; and the fcriptures of GoD do fully account for them.

WE have, therefore, the highest evidence, that men are under a moral depravity, which is common to the race. It is teftified by fcripture, by our own confciences, and the general conviction of the world. Infidels, who deny the truth of revelation, may talk as much as they pleafe, of fuperstition, and the prejudices of education; but they cannot make it appear, probable or poffible, as human nature is, that the general opinion of depravity fhould arife from fuch caufes. Selflove will be allowed common to human nature. From this comes a love of their interest and private rights, and a love of their reputation not lefs than their intereft. Superfition and the prejudices of education are allowed to have great power, over both the fentiments and practices of men; but they have not a power to refift the general impulse of felf-love. It will not be pretended, that they have a power to make men generally, renounce all their worldly interefts, and private rights. The acknowledgment of depravity is an acknowledged lofs of reputation, and it is not to be fuppofed there would be a general confession of this; unless there be the powerful testimony of natural confcience, that it is the cafe.

IT is a matter, of the greatest importance, to understand the nature of this depravity, or in what it confifts; for without fuch knowledge, we can neither know the extent of our fin, nor the most fuitable means of deliverance. Men may be confcious of fin, they may feel themfelves guilty, may be afraid to come before GoD, and fly to many fervices as means of appealing him, while their notions of depravity, are very indiftinct. This is often the cafe thro' inattention to the fubject, or from not faithfully fearching the holy fcriptures, which give us the best light. 1 believe, alfo, that depravity itfelf, indifpoles men to acknowledge the thing in which it effentially confifts.

IN confidering this fubject, it will be proper; I. To collect evidence from the holy fcriptures, that all men are in a state of depravity and fin.

II. INQUIRE, in what this depravity confifts, and how the feveral powers and faculties of the mind are affected by it.

III. COMPARE the description which will be given of our original and common depravity, with the apparent character of mankind; their conduct, and their treatment of GOD and creatures in all ages ; by which we shall fee the fcriptural account of this moral corruption to be a just one, and entitled to our most ferious belief.

I. THE facred hiftory of human nature, gives us an account of the introduction of fin, foon after the creation. If there were no account of this and the point were wholly in the dark, it would not difprove the depravity of mankind, which is discovered by so many facts in gene-ral experience. Still, the account of the introduction of fin, by which our first parents and all their natural offspring became depraved and guilty creatures, is a circumftance which adds great credibility and confistency to the divine ftory.

AFTER the apoltacy, God brought the offenders to trial, and pronounced fentence on their disobedience. Effects of the sentence have been found in every age; pain, diftrefs, mifery, and many calamities. In the hiftory of the ages immediately fucceeding the apoftacy, GoD charges all men with being finners, and proves the charge by their works. The earth was filled with violence. until the honor of Gon required him to cleanfe it by a deluge. Tho' this was a neceffary chastifement, to stop the progress of vice, and bear a testimony for the moral character of the fupreme governor; it did not regenerate human nature. The nature of man remained the fame after the deluge as it was before; and the corrupted heart proved itfelf by corrupt actions.

AFTER this, GOD felected a particular family and nation, to be the repositories of his word and a written law; as the most eligible way of refisting the torrent of vice and spiritual ignorance, and of preparing the way for a kingdom in the world, glorious in divine knowledge and holinefs. This was the beginning of the written word, which is now compleated in the canon of fcripture.

THROUGH the whole, there are frequent allufions and direct references, to the first apostacy, as the fource of those evils with which the world is filled. Men are represented finful and guilty —departed from Gop—ignorant of his glory indisposed to honor him—without a love of his holy nature and government—ferving themselves and the creatures in the exercise of divers lufts —hating, biting and devouring one another, when left to the practice of their natural temper. Serm. VI.

THE hiftorical part of fcripture confirms this reprefentation, by innumerable facts, concerning nations and individuals; fo that the total depravity of human nature, is a fact most firongly proved by the facred hiftory of mankind.—This hiftory hath in it, all the marks of fincerity and truth, and the visible fins of both Jews and Gentiles, are traced back by the omnifcient writer, to an evil heart that is common to men. This is the common ftory of the Old Testament historians and prophets; and in numberless address, instructions, reproofs and warnings from God, the universal depravity of man is assured as a fact, that is indisputable.

WHEN we come to the New Teftament, which particularly unfolds the method of falvation by the grace of GOD; the whole fcheme of doctrine, and the evangelical duties required from finners, are grounded on the previous fact, of a total depravity in men. On this account a divine atonement became neceffary; also the influences of the Spirit of GOD, to create men anew, and raife them from fpiritual death to a holy life in CHRIST JESUS. If the scripture be true, the utter finfulness of men in the fight of GoD must be allowed. Those who attempt to receive the fcriptures, or the gospel, as being of infinite value, on any other ground than this, are bringing together two fchemes of fentiment, which can never agree. The facred writers in proving the need or fhowing the offices of the gospel, either pre-fuppofe, or prove the depravity of all the earth.

PAUL confiders this fubject largely, in the beginning of the epiftle to the Romans, preparatory to his stating our justification by the free grace of GOD through JESUS. He divides mankind into two great classes, Jews and Gentiles. The former were God's profeffing people, of the feed of Abraham, to whom his law and the oracles of grace were committed. Under the latter name of Gentiles, it is well known, that in the fcriptural use of the word, all other people, befide the Jews, were included ; fo that Jews and Gentiles inclusively contain all mankind.

In the first and part of the fecond chapter, he confiders the universal character of the Gentiles, and enumerates the fins, which were a proof of the state of their hearts. He says, concerning them, That when they knew GOD they glorified him not as GoD, neither were thankful, but become vain in their imaginations, and their foolifb heart was darkened .- That they did not like to retain GOD in their knowledge.-That they are without excu/e.-That they changed the truth of GOD into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the descriptive of the greatest depravity.

THE fecond chapter includes the Jews alfo under the fame fentence of total fin. Therefore thou art inexcufeable, O man, whofoever thou art that judgest : For wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself ; for thou that judgest doest the same things .- Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law (i. e. a revelation, or the ritual law) and makest thy boast of God. Sc.-Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? -Thou that makeft thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorest thou GoD? For the name of GOD is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you.-Afterwards, in the third chapter, the apostle puts the question, What advantage then hath the Yow? What benefit do they derive from being the profeffing people of Gon, if they be not as a people delivered from the depravity of human nature? The answer is, Much every way, chiefly because to them were committed the oracles of Gop. Their advantage, is doctrinal inftruction in the nature of fin and the way of forgiveness; but they came into the world with finful hearts, as the Gentiles do, and remain under the condemning guilt of fin, until fanctified and justified by the grace of GOD.

FURTHER on, he comes to our text as a conclusion of the discourse-We have before proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under fin ; as it is written, there is none righteous, no, not one :----And he alfo adds, There is none that understandeth-there is none that seeketh after GoD-they are all gone out of the way-they are together become unprofitable-destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known. This is Paul's defcription of Jews and Gentiles, including all mankind.

I wish it to be remembered that a great number of politive testimonies, for the total depravity of all mankind, and which might be perti-nently introduced here, to prevent repetition will be referved to the next branch of the difcourfe, when we fhall inquire in what this depravity confifts.

WHEN the scriptures speak of good men, or of any exercises in the human heart, that are pleafing to GOD; they afcribe them to an origin, perfectly confistent with the doctrine of a total, moral corruption of human nature. The queftion is not, whether there be any holinefs in any of mankind ; but whether, there be any in them naturally, previous to the gospel renovation and forgiveness? We know there is a degree of holiness and conformity to God in fome minds; but whence doth it come, and is it the natural character of any man? It comes wholly from the fanctifying grace of GOD thro' JESUS CHRIST, and had no exiftence until produced by divine power. All those facred paffages, therefore, which afcribe the existence and every degree of holines, to the renewing fpirit of GOD, and such paffages are very numerous; are as much a teftimony for the original depravity of men, as they be for the need of fanctifying grace. The whole Bible, may therefore be adduced, as evidence in point for the moral corruption of mankind, and that they act wholly under the influence of it, except fo far, as a fovereign GOD is pleased to redeem and change them.

THE hiftory of the apoftacy; the hiftory of nations and individuals in every age; the hiftory both of bad and good men; the hiftory of redemption, in its progrefs, purchafe and application; the defcription of the fpirit's operation, and the evangelical graces of good people; the hiftory of the divine government, and its terminating in a state of eternal rewards; do all suppose and prove the depravity of human nature. It is in vain to fay, we need a greater number of particular texts, affirming this fact, concerning every creature who is born into the world; for we have enough fuch, and if the number were increafed tenfold, and expressed in the most pointed manner, the evidence arifing from thefe particular affertions, would not be equal to the general testimony of scripture history and doctrine. All these agree in this point, that man is a creature totally depraved and dead in trefpaffes and fins.

II. WE are to inquire, in what this depravity confifts, and how the feveral powers and faculties of the mind are affected by it. THE underftanding, is that capacity of the rational mind by which it perceives truth, and judges the relation between different truths. The will, is that power of the rational mind, by which it choofes or refufes, receives or rejects, fuch truths as are perceived or known by the underftanding. Choofing or refufing always imply love or hatred of the propofed truth. Choofing a truth or an object, is loving it; rejecting, is hating it. Hence, the will, the heart, and the affections, may in moft moral and evangelical difcourfes, be used as words of the fame meaning. A holy will is a holy heart, and a holy heart flows out in holy affections, towards holy objects.

1. The primary feat of depravity is in the heart, will, or affections; fo that if this be made right, a rectification of whatever is wrong in any other power or faculty of the mind, will of course follow.

THIS depravity, is fo effentially feated in the heart or will, that no kind of addrefs or acting on the other faculties, will remove fin from the foul. The regenerating power of GoD, acts directly on the heart or will, and the most powerful or long continued action, on the understanding, will not change the heart. A temper, disposition, inclination, taste or reliss which are right or wrong, mean the fame as a heart or will, that is right or wrong.

THE word heart, most commonly is used in the fcriptures, denoting the will and affections, and feems to be uniformly confidered as the feat or fource of holinefs and fin. There are a multitude of paffages which show this.

THE law of holinefs given by Mofes and by CHRIST is, Thou fhall love the Lord with all thy heart—that is, choofe and cleave to him with the ftrongeft affection. When GoD defcribes his own fanctifying action on the mind, he fays, Then will I fprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean. A new heart alfo will I give you, and a new fpirit will I put within you; and I will take the stony heart out of your sleft. Those who hear the word aright, are fuch as receive it into good and honeft hearts. Holinefs is defcribed, by a clean, a right, a pure, a wife, and an understanding heart ; and fin by the contrary, fuch as an evil, and a hard heart. In defcribing the antediluvian corruption, GOD fays that mens hearts were to evil only, and that continually. The prophets and JESUS CHRIST defcribe mens rejection of the truth, to their hearts being waxed grofs. The apostle afcribes mens spiritual ignorance to the, hardness of their hearts. GOD charges mankind with having an evil heart of unbelief. CHRIST in enumerating the practical fins of men, fays, they come out of the heart. It is faid of men, that Their hearts gather iniquity to themselves-are corrupted-are hardened -that they commit all manner of fin in the heartthat they imagine mischief, study destruction, and are mad in their hearts.

SOMETIMES the word will is used denoting the fame, Ye will not come to me that ye might have life, that is, your hearts are opposed to coming. The fenfible exercifes of the heart and will are what we call the affections, fuch as love, delight, rejoicing, hatred, enmity, mourning, and all thefe are exercifes of the heart.

• MENS depravity is often defcribed by their love of what is wrong, and their want of love or enmity to that which is right and good. They love fin-delight in departing from God-choofe not his ways nor his law, and endeavour to put far away his character and the duties they owe him. They prefer or love their own will, more than his holy will. The law of holinefs is to love the

Serm. VI.

Lord with thy whole heart. The depravity in finners is a love of themselves and the creatures, with the whole heart or fupremely; and hence it comes that the friendship of the world is enmity against God. And that, the carnal mind is enmity against GOD; for it is not subject to the law of GOD, neither indeed can be. Enmity to GoD, his law, and government is the neceffary confequence of their fupreme love being turned on themfelves. The natural structure of the human mind is fuch, that a want of love to God, terminates in a fupreme love of himfelf, and the creatures as they are adapted to gratify the lufts of a finful heart. Let a love of God ceafe from the heart, and enmity to his character, his law and government, and the whole fystem of holiness will of course follow: So that the heart must be confidered as the primary feat of man's depravity. Here it entered -here it reigns-and from this fountain it corrupts the foul. And as all the effects of the first apoftacy, on other powers of the mind, proceeded. from a corrupt heart; fo it is upon the heart that the power of GOD is exerted to bring us into a right state. Therefore the change of regeneration is called being renewed in love, a renovation of the will and affections, whereby there is a fupreme delight and choice of holy objects.

GOD is love. His love is his holinefs. The higheft fum of happinefs in his own infinite nature, and in the intelligent kingdom he hath created, is the object of his love. He loves himfelf in union with his kingdom, and his kingdom in union with himfelf; fo that both make but one object. The creature, who is perfect in holinefs, hath the fame object, and regards himfelf only as a part, fubordinated to the glorious and eternal object of holy affection. He loves, defires, and acts for an end infinitely greater than himfelf. In fight of this the perfect faints loofe fight of themselves, and know their own worth only in union with GoD and his pure family. This holinefs exifts in the heart and affections.

THE depraved finner can love, but it is his own happinefs in folitary diffinction and actual opposition to the happiness and glory of GOD and his kingdom. The holy and the depraved mind have, therefore, objects of love, entirely diffinct; fo that there immediately fprings up an opposition of interests, and this in its natural operation. becomes enmity against GoD, and a hatred of his law and of religious duty.

2dly. THE word of GOD doth alfo defcribe the depravity of man, by ignorance, darkness and blindnefs. If the will or heart be the primary feat of depravity, what is meant by thefe expreffions, and how is the rational intellect or underftanding affected? In anfwer to this inquiry I reply,

1. THAT by the ignorance or blindnefs afcribed to finners in the word of GoD, is not commonly meant doctrinal ignorance, or any incapacity in the natural intellect to perceive truth, or judge of the relation between different truths.

Holy and depraved men, can alike perceive the truth or falfehood of propositions which are placed before the understanding? They can receive evidence, and infer one truth from another. This is a natural operation of the mind, which was not deftroyed by the apoftacy, and doth not prove, either the existence or want of holines. If men had not the natural powers of understanding, and of receiving doctrinal knowledge, they could not be finful. As an inftance, If men had no doctrinal knowledge, of GoD's existence or of his law, or the intellect was incapable of receiving it, they would not be guilty for actions of disobedience. CHRIST told the Jews, Ye have both feen and hated me and my father .- If I had not come and spoke to you, ye had not had fin, but now ye have no cloak for your fin. Both these passages, refer to doctrinal knowledge, and the persons who faw, and who heard CHRIST fpeak, were in the depth of that blindnefs, which is effential to depravity.

THERE are millions of finners, at the prefent time, who have just doctrinal knowledge, and much clear fpeculation on the gofpel; who labor under the genuine blindness of fin, to as great a degree as the heathen. All unfanctified perfons are under that ignorance and blindness of fin of which the scripture speaks.

I would not be understood, that there is as much doctrinal light among finners as there would be if they were holy. The indulgence of their intemperate lufts, by injuring the body, may enervate the mind and the vigor of natural understanding. Also by the opposition of their hearts to truth, they are indifposed to feek for it; they neglect means and do not fludy to be informed. From hence comes an amazing degree of doctrinal ignorance, in those who have the word of GOD and the best means of instruction. It is furprizing to fee this ignorance in multitudes, who know that the bleffedness or mifery of eternity is at stake; and it shows the prodigious diflike of their hearts to the truth; a diflike fo ftrong, that it pains them to fee doctrinal light, and they fly away from it as difagreeable. Still, even this ignorance, is not the thing, of which God's word most commonly speaks, in defcribing the fin of human nature. Doctrinal or fpiritual light and ignorance, are diftinct things ; and it is fpiritual ignorance which is effential to the nature of depravity. Where there is the greatest doctrinal light, there may be the greatest fpiritual blindness. Doctrinal light, is seeing the truth by means of evidence prefented to the understanding; and when feen, it may appear either glorious or hateful; according as the moral state of the heart shall be. Spiritual light is seeing the glory of truth; it appears amiable, excellent and lovely. Seeing the glory of truth implies a good heart. Spiritual ignorance is feeing no beauty and glory in truth, and nothing in GOD which makes him to be defired. Doctrinal ignorance may be removed by the inflituted means of inftruction ; but fpiritual ignorance can be removed only by the power of GoD renewing the heart, and all means of instruction are here ineffectual. When GOD acts to enlighten fpiritually, he does it, not by a revelation of truth which was before unfeen by the understanding, or giving any new power to the perceiving faculty; but folely by changing the heart. In the heart there is a new creation, new moral qualities infufed by the holy fpirit, and this is regeneration. When the heart is made holy, the beauty and glory of holinefs is perceived; and until there be this change of heart, the finner whether he lives in a heathen or christian land, is in total fpiritual blindnefs.

THIS blindnefs is meant in the following paffages, and many others. Being grieved for the blindnefs of their heart.-Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of GoD, thro' the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart .- And knowest not that thou art blind .- If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost : In reshom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, left the light of the glorious gospel of CHRIST, who is the image of GOD, should shine into them.—For GOD who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts ; to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of GoD, in the face of JESUS CHRIST. The hiding, the blindnefs, the light fhining into the heart, which are mentioned in these passages, applies folely to fpiritual light and ignorance. Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart. This blindnefs, which is most dreadful to human nature, is one under which men will remain. until God is pleafed to fanctify them for himself; and all the means of inftruction in the christian world, have no power to remove it, unless the renewing fpirit of GOD accompanies his own means .- For this reafon, the depravity of human nature, in the word of God, is traced to the heart as a fountain. -There must be a conformity of the heart, to the moral character of GOD and to the truth, in order to fee his glorious lovelinefs, and the fatiffying beauty of virtue.

It hence appears that depravity doth not originate in the understanding, but hath its primary feat in the will and affections; and when these are perfectly rectified, the wholemind ministers to holiness.—There are a great number of useful inferences from this subject, all of which, except the two following are deferred to a succeeding difcours.

1. The preceding defcription of man's natural corruption, fhows that the use of means alone can never remove it.

MEANS may inftruct and act powerfully on the underftanding to give doctrinal light; and this is the whole of their efficacy, the whole for which they were appointed, by a wife GoD.

LET us confider what the means of religion do, and their action on the mind of man.

THEY fix our attention; fet the character and law of GOD before us; make us acquainted with our own character, and wants, and with the nature and confequences of holinefs and fin; and generally, they give doctrinal information; but beyond this, it is not conceived they have any power .- If the depravity of man confifted in doctrinal ignorance, the means of instruction might fet him right; but this is not the cafe. The fupposition, that means, by the most diligent use of them, will remove the corruption of human nature, implies that the heart is previoufly right; and that all fins are no more than pitiable mistakes, arising from doctrinal ignorance-Let this idea be followed in its genuine confequences, and it really denies the fin of human nature. The heart, the will, the moral tafte can be changed only by the power of GoD.-Hence the fcriptures fpeak of a new birth-a renovationa new creation-a new heart-and the neceffary action of the Holy Spirit to make the change. This may be illustrated, in the instance of seeing the divine character. The ignorant finner has doctrinal knowledge to a certain degree, and to that which is feen of God his heart is opposed. Let his doctrinal knowledge, by the use of means be doubly increased. Will this enlarged view of what he difliked, make him love it? Common fense would determine quite the contrary. Those who depend on the use of means to change their hearts, are denying the power of GOD and refifting the Holy Ghoft; and there is no reafon to expect he will help until they feel that they are in the hand of fovereign power and goodnels-and that he must work to fave them. Means were instituted to instruct the understanding, and fix the attention on truth. The Holy Spirit is appointed to renew and fanctify, and the fpiritual enlightening which he gives, comes from his prior action on the heart. But is there not a greater probability that those who diligently use appointed means, wil be fanctified by divine power, than if they omit the use? Doubtless there is, and those who omit the use, have no reason to expect that GoD will fanctify and forgive. In the falvation of his people, he does honor to all his own inftitutions -he may give the Spirit to whom he pleafeth, and he will not give to those who are regardless of his appointments-we ought therefore very diligently to use appointed means, and be at the fame time fenfible, that it is the fovereign power of God which changes the heart, removes the power of original corruption, and gives a beginning preparation for heaven.

2. The defcription that hath been given of man's natural depravity, flows that the ignorance of which the fcriptures fpeak is no excule for fin.

DOCTRINAL ignorance may, in fome cafes, excufe from fin. Thus the heathen who never had CHRIST preached to them, are not guilty for the neglect of receiving him; while in thofe who have the gofpel, the want of faith is a great fin. If men did not know the moral law, either by a natural or revealed evidence, this would be an excufe for thofe things in them which are now finful.—All men, have fufficient doctrinal knowledge of the moral law, to render them inexcufable in the fight of the judge.

THAT fpiritual ignorance which I have largely defcribed, in no fenfe or degree, is an excufe for fin.—It all comes from fin in the heart, and is in proportion to the degree of fin. The more finful the more blind .- This blindnefs, inftead of being an excufe, is the index of an evil character, and the degree of blindnefs meafures the degree of guilt ; hence the word of God confiders mens blindness as their fin and threatens it with punishment. When finners come before the bar of God, if they plead, that they faw nothing in his character which delighted them-no glory in his truth and juffice-nothing amiable in his lawnothing lovely in CHRIST's purity, and the holy doctrines of his gofpel-no excellency in the chriftian temper and obedience-no pleafure in the duties of worship and the company of GoD's people; the judge will answer that on this very evidence, they are guilty and righteoufly condemned. And fhould we not my reader in a fimilar cafe, judge the fame? Suppose an unholy fon, pleading as an excufe, for his undutifulnels and his difobedience to the reafonable laws of a just and good father, that the character of the father difgusted him, and he could find no pleasure either in his character or law; would this excufe his difobedience ? Nay, would it not be the aggravating proof of his depravity ?----It certainly would. Let none therefore think, becaufe religion doth not appear amiable to them, that this will be any excufe. So far to the contrary, the more blind they find themfelves to the fpiritual glory of divine things; the more alarmed they ought to be for their fituation .- This circumftance flows them to be exceeding finful, and far removed from the kingdom of heaven.

MAY the Lord change all our hearts to delight in himfelf. AMEN.

SERMON VII.

Man's depravity.

ROMANS III. 9, 10.

-For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under fin; as it is written, there is none righteous, no, not one.

N a former difcourfe from these words, evidence was collected from the holy fcriptures, that all men are in a state of depravity and fin.

INQUIRY was also made in what this depravity confifts, and how the feveral powers and faculties of the mind are affected by it. The understanding; and heart, will or affections were defined. From the word of GoD, it appears that the heart or will including the affections, is the primary feat of moral depravity; and the understanding is confequently affected, but not in fuch manner, that the ignorance of finners is any excuse for them, or that doctrinal instruction will have any power to remove the diforder. It was the heart which apost apost and by this means, the understanding was made dark. It will continue dark while the heart is wrong ; which must be changed by the holy fpirit, to illumine the foul with the glory of Gon, and the beauty and delights of holinefs. As this blindnefs comes entirely from finful affections, GOD treats it as finful; and the degree of a creature's fin may be known by the degree of his blindnefs.

THE diforder, in the finner's heart, is a mifplaced love. His chief affection is taken from GoD : from the general good; from feeking the greateft glory and happiness of the intelligent system, and placed on himfelf. For himfelf alone he lives, defires and acts. The object of holy affection, is the happiness of GOD and his kingdom in union. The object of finful affection, is felf in a state of separation from GoD and his kingdom ; and this flate of feparation runs directly into a flate of opposition and enmity, from whence come all the fins of men against God and his creatures, nor is there any perception of glorious beauty in holy objects.

THE third thing proposed, in confidering the fubject, is to compare the defcription that hath been given of our original and common depravity, with the apparent character of mankind; their conduct; and their treatment of GoD and creatures in all ages, by which we shall fee, the fcriptural account of this moral corruption to be a just one, and entitled to our most ferious belief.

BEFORE I proceed to a comparison of the doctrine, as it hath been defcribed, with the actual conduct of mankind in all ages; it is neceffary that feveral things be premifed, to explain fome appearances, which may, otherwife, be relied on as evidence, in favor, either of the purity of human nature, or of a partial depravity.

Serm. VII. Man's depravity.

By the total depravity of man, is not meant. that the heart breaks out into all possible enormity of vice.

We know this is not the cafe. An inward enmity may tife higher-finful objects may be loved more-and visible crimes may be multiplied. It is not meant that finners are as wicked as they can be, or as they will be, in fome future time, if they remain impenitent; but it means they have no holinels, and all their affections, fo far as they have a moral character, are finful, without any mixture of true holinefs.

Two finners of the fame natural capacity, may be entirely finful, and still one of them may be more finful than the other. The fame finner may be totally finful, at two different times; but more finful at one than the other. In this world, the wills and affections of men are under the restraint of God, out of favor to his own kingdom, and the ingathering of fouls to CHRIST. If all men acted out their hearts, in the full extreme of finful paffions and actions, it would difqualify the world for a place of probation. Thro' mutual injuries, there would be no time for reflection, or opportunity to use fuch means, as the fpirit accompanies for falvation. But this restraint is not holines; neither, is there in it, any thing that approaches towards the moral nature of holinefs. The reftrained perfon is ftill totally depraved; that is, all which is in his heart is finful, and nothing holy, and without holinefs no man can fee God.

WHEN evil men hear themfelves charged with total depravity, to appeafe confcience they often argue, in the following way.----There are fome defirable things in the world which I have not coveted ;-fome things I have coveted, which I might in a more wicked manner have taken by violence; therefore, I am not totally depraved. Allowing this to be true, it is no difproof of total depravity; for the queftion is not, whether the finner be finful to the greatest extreme of exercife, but whether there be in him any thing that is morally good or holy?

FURTHER, in most cases, there must be some prospect of fuccess to bring into exercise sensible defires of the heart.

MEN may not defire to walk across the ocean, only becaufe they know the thing to be impoffible; whereas, if a poffibility appeared they would defire it inftantly. So the finner may fay, I never defired to deftroy the GODHEAD and fit on the throne of the univerfe. I will allow, it is poffi-. ble, that no fuch fenfible defire hath ever paffed. in the finner's mind. Still I must inquire of him, whether he never repined, or thought he was hardly treated by providence, or that things might be ordered better ? All thefe are exercifes of the fame heart, which would defire to dethrone God, if the thing might be probably effected. Total depravity doth not imply the greatest possible degree of unholy exercise or action; but it means the whole want of what is morally good-a total deficiency of a right temper and affections, fo that the man, fo far as he acts, is altogether a finner.

THRO' the ordering of fovereign wifdom, the circumftances under which finners exift, make a great difference in the weaknefs and ftrength of the affections. In the prefent world, things are ordered to reftrain fin, and keep the energies of its action within certain limits. The prefent good of GoD's kingdom requires this. In another world, it will be different, and divineglory may require all reftraints to be taken off, that the odious nature of fin may fully appear. This will be awfully the cafe.

2dly. THE flate of things is fo ordered in this world, that many actions, which produce visible good effects in fociety, proceed from a heart and from motives, which are unholy.

A HEART altogether felfish, is totally finful; but men with fuch hearts, may do things which are for the prefent benefit of fociety. Ambition, pride or avarice may make them diligent in their bufinefs, fair in their dealings, humane to their neighbours, or intrepid defenders of the public weal, while all is for themfelves. Both the public and their neighbours, would be injured and hated, if from a change of relative fituation felf-interest required it. How many fair words are spoken from a heart of bitterness. How many friendships stand on party alliances, which are finful in their nature and defign. How often do finners patronize one another, carefully watching over their mutual reputation and intereft, folely to keep themfelves in countenance, or to find companions agreeable to their tafte, or to fecure fome good to themfelves. The world itfelf would not contain the books which might be written defcribing civil actions-neighbourly actions-actions apparently humane and just, which come from a heart and motives altogether unholy in the fight of God. It is thus, God uses hypocritical finners, to preferve fuch a ftate of order in the world, as the purpofes of his own eternal counfel require. He makes use, even of the destructive actions of finners, to build up his own kingdom. But let it be remembered, that the civility of mankind is not holinefs, if the heart and its motives be wrong.

This description may be extended, even to the visible fervices of religion. Men may prayhear the word of Gon-read the fcriptures-in fome fenfe keep the Sabbath, and regard gofpel ordinances, while in a flate of total depravity. There was no holinefs in the Pharifee, who faid, I thank thee, Lord, that I am not as other men, for I fast twice in a week ; nor in the young man, who told CHRIST concerning the commandments, All these have I kept from my youth up. There was no holinefs in these perfons, therefore, they were totally depraved. They did all thro' felfifhnefsthro' a love of themfelves only, and a dread, rather than love of Gon.

IF ye love them who love you, faid CHRIST, what reward have ye? It is altogether finful. Performing a visible duty, only thro' dread of divine punishment, is the fame as doing it wholly from a love of ourfelves, without regard to the excellence of God. So that the performance of many vifible fervices in religion, is no evidence against the doctrine advocated.

Also pity, compatiion, a love of our country, a zeal for its good laws, and many other things, which in the common language of men are called focial and political virtues, may be found, for a feafon, in creatures who are totally unholy. All thefe may arife from fome real or fuppofed benefit to ourfelves, while there is no love of moral excellence.--We know the most depraved may love their children becaufe they are their own.-For the fame reafon, they may love their country and its laws, and in many inftances pity the diftrefs of a fellow-creature. The wonderful wifdom of God is feen, in managing the wicked felfishness of the human heart, and making it the means of preferving a certain degree of order in the human state, fo long as he is gathering his own people into the kingdom of holinefs.

3dly. In comparing the defcription of human depravity, with the appearance and conduct of men, we must also confider ; that many have been reclaimed from the reigning power of their natural fin, by the fanctifying grace of Gob.

WHEN infidels attempt to depreciate a revelation, by fetting up the powers and attainments of reason; it is their custom to ascribe to reason, much of that knowledge which originated in a revelation. So those, who attempt to prove, either the natural purity or partial depravity of human nature, claim as evidence, all the good which there is in the hearts and actions of men, without giving any credit to the fanctifying grace of GOD thro' JESUS CHRIST. There are many pious people-there is fome degree of holinefs in many hearts; but whence did it come? Was it natural to these persons, or hath it been excited by the action of the holy fpirit? Afk the fanctified, for they are the best judges, and their anfwer will be; that if they have any holinefs, it is in finall degree, and this finall degree was not natural to them. These good perfons, are the first to allow their own total depravity by nature, and give all the glory of what there is right in them, to the fovereign and renewing mercy of GOD. If these who appear the nearest to purity, in their temper and actions, claimed this as their natural character, it would give fome colour of objection to the doctrine; but they are the first to cry out unclean, totally unclean, in the fight of God.

The advocates for a natural purity, or partial depravity, are found among fuch as appear to be farthest removed from it; and tho' fome of them may be regular in their lives, they give no evidence of an ardent love of Gon-delight in the fpirituality of the divine law-pleafure in a life of prayer and devotion, or eminence in any of the exercises which show a very fanctified heart. The truth is, they have no great fenfe of fin, and therefore think human nature pure, or but little debased.

THESE remarks will fully account, for fuch appearances in the character and conduct of men, as fome' may use to evince but a partial depravity. They teach us, that the doctrine of total corruption by nature, is not rendered doubtful by a comparison with matters of fact.

I SHALL now mention fome things, in the general appearance of mankind, which flow a heart by nature totally depraved.

1. THERE is a natural and general forgetfulnefs of GoD; and the few thoughts of him, which men have, appear to be excited by terror and not to flow from a heart filled with love.

ALARMING providences, dangers, wants, pains, the inftituted means of inftruction, impel men fometimes to think of GOD. The ways of divine providence, and inftituted means are wonderfully calculated, to remind us of the divine character and government. All nature around us-all daily events, our mercies and our trials, are defigned to make us keep GOD in fight. With all this provision of means how little is he thought of? The defires of the heart reft on the gift, without afcending to the giver. Mens thoughts ftop on fecond caufes without rifing to the great frst cause. All their discourse and actions prove, that other objects are more agreeable to the heart; and that it is with a kind of reluctance, they are brought to think of JEHOVAH. His pure character—his holy law—and most just govern. ment, are not pleafurable fubjects. As young minds open to the evidence of GoD's being and perfections, this doth not correct the evil dispofition. Objects of ambition, interest and pleafure engage all the attention. They look to the things around them for happines, and on these their discourse turns. Unless the providence or spirit of GoD speaks, with uncommon energy, they go on in deep security, devoted to themfelves and the world.

COULD things be fo if there were any love of GOD? The law of reafon and revelation require a fupreme love of him, and who dare deny the juffice of the requirement? Could things be fo, if any, even a partial love of GOD, or as much as we have, for ourfelves and the creatures, were natural to us? They certainly could not. Nature impels us to think of the objects which we love. The heart is inquring and following them; and if the love be fupreme it makes hafte to find them. No pains are too expensive, and no watchings too laborious to find the objects we love; and when found every action and word is expressive of joy.

Is this feeking GOD natural to men? Do they come into the world, grow up and go thro' life with it? When providence brings his character into view, do they rejoice as in fight of a beloved object? Do they perufe and re-perufe his image drawn in his law, or appear to be fearching for him in the glorious works of nature? Whence arifes the natural dread of his prefence, and of coming before him by death, if his character be loved, when it is a law of our being to feek the prefence of a beloved object?

If there were not, a total want of delight in God, and a natural opposition of heart to his holy nature and government, men could not be fo forgetful of him, by whom they are clothed and fed, and of whole infinite perfection, there is fuch clear evidence. When we add to this the high crimes which are conftantly happening, and the actual fins of which every man is confcious, it gives great ftrength to the conclusion. The character given of mens natural flate, by the word of God, sufficiently accounts for this state of things.

2dly. The conduct of men in all ages proves them to be felfish creatures, and that their natural love is only to themfelves.

CAN those who have thoroughly confidered human nature, and read the character of man in his actions-in the conduct of individuals and of nations, in every age, have any doubt of this? Is not this generally confeffed, by the watchfulnefs and guard men exercife for themfelves over all others? Do they not feel it, until a change takes place in their affections, which, after they have experienced, they are willing to afcribe to the fanctifying power of GOD? This felfifhnefs or finful felf-love, is the very effence of a total depravity, and there needs nothing more, when all restraint is withdrawn, to make most complete wickednefs.

It is a dictate of common reafon, that all rational beings and objects, and all the interests of intelligence ought to be loved according to their excellence. The glory and happiness of GoD-HEAD is of more value, than all creatures-of many creatures, more than of one-of the whole, more than of a part. These observations point out to us the moral law of holinefs, as confifting, in a benevolence proportioned to the value of the object. Selfishness or a finful felf-love is contrary to this. The felfish creature wishes the whole to be fubordinate to himfelf; or if fuch a wifh hath not paffed in his heart, it was prevented by the apparent impracticability of the thing. This felfifh heart fhows itfelf in all that takes place around us-in mens grafping defires -in their feelings and actions to others. They with to be first in influence, in esteem, in property, in power. To this the heart is continually reaching. Dear felf-advancement is at the bottom of action. By this rule, measures and events are judged-parties formed-worldly friendships cemented-and animofities kindled. By this, the man in his natural ftate, is excited to those exertions which have many laudable effects on prefent fociety-he often advances the interest of others as the most direct way of advancing his own-does beneficent actions to advance his reputation-adds the weight of his influence to the energy of good laws, that his own perfon and property may be fafe in a world of violence-lets others enjoy fome things, which he hath power to take, left the fpirits of the multitude, felfish like himfelf, fhould be exafperated and wrench from him his all. He loves his family, becaufe they belong to himfelf. If those children, which are the idols of affection, belonged to another, with the amiable qualities they now poffefs, he would have no affection either for their bodies or fouls. For the fame reafon he may love many other individuals, his neighbours and his nation. He may alfo be liberal, for who more liberal than the tyrant often is-but observe how he is liberal! Only to administer to his own fafety and pleasure. He is liberal to the flatterer who fooths his pride; or the defender of his fafety; or to the fubordi-

nate finner, who is in fome way neceffary for him; or perhaps his liberality is from fear rather than love.

NATURAL confcience reminds him of the day of judgment, and he does many good actions gladly, to purchafe his own fafety; but felfifhnefs ftill is his predominating temper, and with all thefe he is totally depraved. This alone is the hinge on which his affections turn, and he hath no love of GoD for what he is in himfelf, nor of the divine rights, nor of a univerfe of creatures, for the real value of their intelligence and happinefs. If he had this love it would be holinefs, and fuch as can with certainty find fome degree of it in themfelves, may hope that GoD hath had mercy on them.

THUS the appearance and the conduct of mankind, confidering all circumstances in this world of probation, as we may reafonably fuppofe they would be ordered by a God of infinite power and wifdom, confirm the fcriptural account of a deep and total depravity, which is the natural character of men; and that this depravity is feated in the heart, will or affections. This withdrawment of fupreme love from GOD and his intelligent kingdom, which are the only objects of a holy love, and refting in himfelf, will account for all the wickedness that can ever be practifed by creatures. It will produce enmity to the divine character, law and government. It will produce every crime of heart and practice against GOD and man. It will caufe an ignorance of the beauty of holinefs-and it is juftly exposed to all the threatened punishments of this and another world.

Ift. THIS defcription of depravity, flows that men may do many actions which are ufeful in the fociety of this world—may be vifibly free from crimes—may attend on the public inftitutions of religion-and difcover great zeal for right actions, while they are in the gall of bitternels and under the bonds of iniquity.

PAUL tells us this-Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels-though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, fo that I could remove mountains-though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. And what is this charity? It is love divested of felfishness. It is a love of character and truths, for their own excellence and value. It is a love in which felf is fubordinate to general good, to the glory of GoD, and the greateft fum of happinefs in the intelligent univerfe. This is gofpel charity, the christian holinefs. There is great danger of reliance for falvation, on fuch attainments, and visible obedience, as may come from a heart deftitute of charity. This is the most common mode of felf-deception. Immerfed in the amufing and bufy fcenes of life, and without ferious confideration, pains are not taken to fearch deep into the heart .- It is not a pleafing employment.-Such do not know their total felfishness in all they do .- Though confcious of fin, they hope it is partial, and that there is fome little good in them .- Perhaps they are moral in their visible actions-may be kind neighbours and fair dealers .- On comparison with the most abandoned finner, they find their characters much more fair, and hence draw the conclusion that they are not totally depraved .- They determine to make fome amendments, and hope GOD will accept them .- Such perfons become prejudiced against the doctrines of divine fovereignty-a total corruption of human nature-and the need of being regenerated and made new creatures.

Thus, they go wholly off from the true gofpel fcheme, and while they rely fome on CHRIST; they rely more on themfelves, and in their own opinion are going to a holy heaven, though deftitute of that renovation fpoken of in the fcriptures. Perfons in this fituation, have never feen the fin of their own hearts, nor the true diffinction between a holy and depraved temper. Thus their hopes may be confiderable, and every action, the matter of which is right, is eagerly feized as evidence of their own fafe state.-Selflove, and fear may produce many fuch actions. They may even love GOD from a supposition, that he loves them, while felfifhnefs is the central point of all their affections .- In this way hypocrites are made .- Thus, mere moralists are eafy in their fituation .- Thus, the thorough doctrines of the gofpel become unpleafant to their hearing, because the felfish ground of their hopes is overturned, and they wifh a bible and a preacher more tender to the felfish affections .- It is for these reasons, felf-examination becomes fo unpleafing, and fo difficult a work for fallen finners.

In addition to thefe objections, it is alfo added by the felfifh mind, I can fee no kind of beauty in fuch holinefs, as thefe remarks imply to be neceffary.—This is a fact which muft be allowed; but blindnefs to this beauty proves their criminal condition, and it can be removed, only by a renovation of the heart.

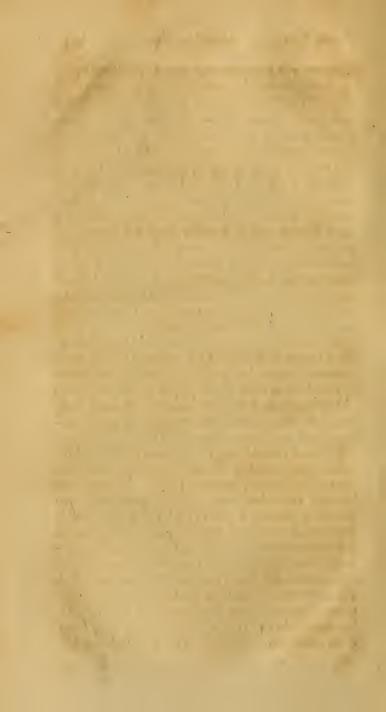

2d. WE may infer, that the opposition of mens hearts is to the true character of GoD, and not to a misapprehension of him. He is opposed to their felsish wills and affections, and they see him to be thus, which is the very reason of their fin.

So long as they conceive him friendly to their felfish affections, they are friendly to him; because, it appears as though he had made himself and his government fubordinate to their will .--They love God in this cafe, from his fuppofed fubserviency to their interests. This finful love of God is founded upon a misconception of his character; for the moment his true character is feen-that he requires felf-confectation and a complete fubmiffion to his own will, the oppofing heart breaks out in enmity and difobedience; fo that the opposition of men's hearts is to the true character of our most holy Lord. Those who suppose a little increase of doctrinal light will remove it, have overlooked the fountain of corruption, and not feen their own hearts truly.

3d. THIS confirms the doctrine of CHRIST, Except a man be born again, he cannot fee the kingdom of heaven.-That which is bern of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of the fpirit, is fpirit.-Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Fallen creatures have no better principle, than this depraved felf-love; and it must be the work of the Holy Spirit, to create them to new and holy affections. To refift or deny the Spirit of God, is fhutting the door of the kingdom of heaven, and destroying to ourfelves the efficacy of the gofpel. All thofe, who deny this work of the Spirit, make the golpel as inefficacious for their own falvation, as if they were to deny CHRIST himfelf. Between these two kinds of infidelity, either denying CHRIST, or denying the Holy Ghoft, how many fhut themfelves out from the kingdom of heaven. May a God of fovereign mercy have compassion to open their eyes before it be too late. AMEN.

SERMON VIII.

Sinners under prefent condemnation.

јони ііі. 18, 19.

But he that believeth not, is condemned already, becaufe he hath not believed in the name of the onlybegotten Son of God.—And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darknefs rather than light, becaufe their deeds are evil.

THE evangelift, in this chapter, relates a difcourfe of our bleffed Saviour, in which fome great and important gofpel doctrines are brought into clear view. The converfation was with Nicodemus, a mafter and teacher in Ifrael, who tho' he was in that flation, was ignorant of a divine renovation of the heart, as neceffary for falvation.—CHRIST explained the doctrine to him, and most plainly afterted the need of fuch a change—the impossibility of being faved without it—and the power and agency of the Holy Spirit by whom it is wrought. He faid that this change is not of blood, nor of the will of the flefh, nor of the will of man, but of GOD.—The Spirit of GOD is the author of it.—We fhall not reafon ourfelves into a holy temper, nor gain it by any means or endeavours, unlefs the Holy Spirit works; fo that to deny his agency, or to grieve him away when he comes to affift, is most effectually fhutting the door of divine grace against ourfelves.

BEING born again further implies, a holy principle from Gon put into the foul, by which it is enabled to relifh, and tafte the excellency of all holy things.—A principle of moral likenefs to Gon where there was none before, nor any thing which bore a moral refemblance of him.—It comes from Gon, and makes thofe who receive it, in fome degree conformed to him.

HAVING stated the need of being renewed, CHRIST proceeds, alfo to defcribe the neceffity of a faving faith, which is that exercife, by which a renewed foul receives CHRIST for his Saviour, and thus becomes entitled to the gofpel promifes of forgiveness and final redemption .- Faith is here called believing in name the of the Son of GOD. And CHRIST illustrates this grace by comparing himfelf to the brazen ferpent, which Mofes lifted up in the wildernefs, to which the wounded Ifraelites looked for healing. The illustration is very instructive. The Ilraelite felt himfelf mortally wounded, and in danger of immediate death. So the finner, before he will look to CHRIST, must feel the mortal wounds of fin-that his fpiritual difeafe is a fatal one, threatening the worft of deaths, and without a remedy in his power .- After the Israelite felt himfelf wounded, the cure was effected only by looking. -So the wounded finner, finds no efficacy to eafe a pained confcience in what he does. All his own works leave him under condemnation of the law.—The virtue which heals is in JESUS CHRIST, and he finds benefit by faith alone, which beholds, receives and choofes the Saviour and his falvation. Whoever thus looks is no longer condemned, being forgiven through JE-SUS CHRIST, who has fuffered and become a ranfom for all thofe who are his.

HAVING ftated the way of falvation in the important doctrines of the new birth, and a faving faith, in our text, he defcribes the unhappy cafe and the extreme danger and guilt of all fuch as have not been changed unto holinefs, and believed in him, But be that believeth not, is condemned already, becaufe be bath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of Gon.—And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darknefs rather than light, becaufe their deeds are evil. Among many important truths, which thefe words contain, there are three, which I fhall confider.

Ift. ALL, who have not a faving faith, are in a ftate of prefent condemnation. There is not fimply danger they will be condemned, in fome future time, but the fentence is already paffed.

2dly. The light which is come into the world, and the means which GOD hath used and still continues to use, will greatly aggravate their guilt, and make his justice in condemnation, very glorious.

Ist. All who have not a faving faith, are in a flate of prefent condemnation.

THE words of CHRIST are fo express, there is no way of placing on them any other fair and natural construction-He that believeth not is condemned already-the fentence is paffed, and agreeable to this the holy fcriptures fay, that GOD is angry with the wicked every day, and his wrath abideth on them.-When he looks on them, as he doth every moment, and fees their fin-a wrong temper-a wrong practice, and a want of love to him, his difpleafure is perfect .--The original threatening was, in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt furely die .- After fin was committed, juffice appeared and pronounced fentence upon the finners, from which moment, they were in a state of condemnation.-All of us are in the fame fituation naturally, under the fame fentence, and there is only one way of being delivered from it, which is by a holy faith in Jesus CHRIST.

It is true, there is a flort reprieve from complete execution of the fentence, granted to us all; but we flould very carefully diftinguifh between a temporary reprieve from complete execution, and a reverfal of the threatening. The reprieve extends to all men for a feafon—the reverfal is only to thofe who have become vitally united to the Saviour of men, the Son of Gon. If the reprieved perfon go to CHRIST, in the prefcribed way of humility and repentance, divine grace will declare him free from condemnation, and until he doth thus go, the fentence remains in full force as it would be, if there were no Redeemer. Alfo, it remains most certain, that after a short delay, execution will commence on the impenitent, without allay. The reprieve confist in two things.

ift. The extremity of the fentence is not yet executed .- Men are now fuffering much punishment for their fins, but it is not the full punifhment.-God has placed them in a state of trial. The full punishment of fin is probably fo extreme, as to be inconfistent with confideration and trial, and would fo diftract the mind, that it could not hear the calls of divine grace, in the manner it now may. Therefore, we find a partial fufpenfion of wretchedness, and only fo much is fuffered, as warns and teaches us, that the wages of fin are indeed forrow and death. It ought, by no means, to be concluded, that the penalty doth not contain fomething vaftly more bitter than what finners feel in this world. When the fbate of trial ends, extreme punishment will be inflicted, for infinite wildom will no longer have a reafon for fuspending.

2d. ANOTHER thing contained in this reprieve, is an opportunity to escape to the only begotten Son of GoD for an eternal deliverance, and complete reversal of the sentence of condemnation.

God is now warning us of our danger—inviting us to come to him by repentance that we may live—and to begin a life of holinefs and true grace, and tafte how fweet and foul-fatisfying it is. Of thofe who truly come none will be rejected— God will forgive their fins, for the fake of his Son, and never bring them to fuffer fuch punifhment as they have deferved.

THE whole ftate of things, in this world, is evidence, that those who believe not are condemned already. There are innumerable punifhments actually taking place, and if execution is begun, it fhows that fentence is paffed. In how folemn a situation does the conscious sinner stand, if sentence be already paffed-if execution be begunand only a few days are to intervene before the full weight takes place. It is in fight of thefe truths, divine mercy becomes fo importunate in its calls to a fecure world, and fays, in the most pathetic language of pity, Why will ye die, O house of Ifrael? It is in fight of these truths, GOD speaks fo plain to us in his holy word. The cafe is fo urgent, that infinite wifdom fees it to require the most plain dealing-the most plain address to confcience-and the most explicit description, of the endless ruin that will follow a misimprovement of this fhort feafon.

CERTAINLY the great and infinite GOD, who upholds fo august a universe as this, and is the parent of reason, cannot be a paffionate and capricious being. Neither is it fupposeable that he would try to terrify us with groundless fears. And he tells us expressly, that all who have not come to JESUS CHRIST are al-ready under fentence of death. The awful fentence of the last day will not be a new one, but only a repetiton of that which is paffed already, with this aggravating circumstance, that the state of reprieve is ended. Mercy will never again come forward and try to fave the guilty, fentenced creature. O that all might feel the reality of the truth I am now urging. A long obfervation of human nature gives me right to fay, that until they feel themselves to be condemned already, they will never take one step towards a life of thorough religion. Until they feel this, they will be as fecure, and as full of vanity, as if there were no eternity before them-no heaven to obtain—or no ftate of endlefs punifhment to efcape. Among all the ftrange things found in a finful heart, it is one of the ftrangeft that fin clofes the eyes, on the danger attending it—on the need of an immediate efcape—on the certain truth of GoD in what he hath told us, and on the awfulnefs of going into another world, without that preparation which the gofpel declares to be neceffary. And there is not only a prefent blindnefs, but fo ftrong a defire of remaining blind, it gives a great difpleafure to fee or hear any thing, which has a tendency to awaken confcience.

2d. THE light which is come into the world, and the means which GOD hath used, and still continues to use, will greatly aggravate their guilt, and make his justice in their condemnation very glorious.

This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men lowed darknefs rather than light. The meaning of this part of the text is, that the furprizing clear light which fhines, if mifimproved, will greatly aggravate the condemnation and mifery of impenitent finners. It is the fame truth as CHRIST expressed in the following words.— If I had not come, and fpoke unto them, they had not had fin; but now they have no cloak for their fin. They would not have had fo great fin, nor would their conduct have been fo criminal as it now is.

A VAST number of men in the chriftian world, who do not live chriftian lives, fpeak of their privileges with great pleafure. They place great dependance on their light and opportunities, tho' they do not make any ufe of them, to obtain a real conformity of heart to GOD himfelf, which is the only thing for which their privileges were given them. Still, it is a folemn truth, that mifimproved privileges will only increase condemnation. This is one of those truths, which CHRIST often brought into view. He told the Jews, it should be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, and even for Sodom and Gomorrha, in the day of judgment, than for them. The reafon was, becaufe they finned against greater knowledge, and better means to do their duty, than the people of those devoted cities had. The gofpel, which originated in infinite love, and offers falvation to finners who are fenfible of their wants and their guilt, carries with it nothing but terror to its condemned and felfifh oppofers. Therefore the apoftle faid explicitly, on this fubject, that the gofpel which he preached, was a favor of life unto life, unto those who obeyed; but of death unto death to those who perish. If it did not fave, if it did not fanctify them, it would increase the weight of their guilt. If they refused it, in its faving and fanctifying call, it must make them more guilty creatures, than they would have been, had no gofpel been published.

GOSPEL calls and warnings-the fearching admonition of the fpirit-the clear fhining of truth from God, in whatever way they come, never leave men as they find them. These things, either leave us made better than we were, and forgiven by GoD; or they leave us hardened, and much more guilty than before.

WHEN the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, feeking rest, and findeth none. Then he faith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits, more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there : and the last state of that man is worse than the first. The meaning of the representation is this .- When by the clear fhining of light, either immediately from the spirit of GoD, or by means, men are brought to fome confideration-are at. tentive-flow a hearing ear, and go no further, they become more guilty. They only walk in dry or comfortlefs places. They do not their whole duty and repent, and believe in JESUS, and therefore find no peace in what they do. As they continue to fin against increased light, they are conftantly becoming more hard, and finally refolve to fit down again in fecurity. A man thus returning to fecurity, finds his houfe empty, fwept and garnished. He has quieted himself with a few visible regulations of amendment; but it is his house and not his heart, that is garnished with love as it ought to be. The awfulnefs of fuch fecurity, and the increase of fin and guilt, are most folemnly represented—be taketh to himself seven other spirits more wicked than himfelf, and the last state of that man is worse than the first. He is become sevenfold more guilty in the fight of God. Misimproved light has greatly increafed the weight of his condemnation.

THESE words are the doctrine of JESUS CHRIST and of the holy fcriptures. And can we fay a word against the reasonableness of the truth? Do not our own common sense, reason and conficience confirm the truth? Does common sense dictate any thing more clearly, than this, that the man who fins against the clearest light is the most guilty creature? Must we not allow, that for fin, in the face of such light as we have, we are more guilty than the heathen, who have no fcripture instruction—no knowledge of a Saviour—no means of grace—and no description from Gon's own revelation of the nature of a holy life and a holy reward? Must we not allow, that after Gop's spirit has warned us by the instrumentality of our confciences, we are more guilty in every fin committed, than before fuch warning was given? If, in full information of truth and our own duty-of offered redemption through Jesus CHRIST-of his death, to fhow the holinefs and love of GODHEAD, we still neglect, our mouths will be fhut in felf-condemnation. This is the very circumftance, which in the plainest manner, shows the exceeding finfulness of a finful heart. It is this, which at the laft day, will in the cleareft manner prove, the unreasonableness of fin, and the glorious witdom and righteoufnels of GoD in being opposed to it. The most aggravated part of the condemnation will be, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light. They acted not from millake, but according to the tafte of their hearts; and they ought to reap the fruit of that, which they chose.

CHRIST knew the human heart, better than any man, and he expressly assigns this as the caufe. It is becaufe their deeds are evil; becaufe there is fomething wrong in them, that they do not favingly rejoice in this light, and love such a Saviour and such falvation with their whole hearts.

LET us be very candid on this fubject. If no other caufe can be found, then every one muft allow, that the caufe affigned by JESUS CHRIST, is the true and great one. Ift. CERTAINLY it is not for want of information.

THE means and nature of this falvation are most clearly deferibed. The temper, the affections, the practice, the duties of religion, cannot be told more plainly than we find them to be, in the word of GoD. Religion is a holy love of GoD, with a correspondent practice, in which there can be no mystery. Men well enough know, what it is to love the creatures and themfelves; and love to GoD is like this, only turned to him and his holines as the object of affection. The cause, therefore, is not any mysterious fields in the nature of religion.

2d. I THINK, alfo, it is certain, we must have a doctrinal conviction that religion, in the long run of things, will be for our intereft .--- No man ferioufly doubts this .- Though he may think it will militate against fome worldly interest, which he wifhes at prefent to preferve; ftill, he cannot but think it will be for his intereft, in the long run of things and as he ftands a candidate for an eternal existence. Let these two things be granted, that we have a doctrinal knowledge what religion is; alfo, a doctrinal conviction that it will be for our interest, to become favingly religious; I think no other caufe remains to be affigned, but a difrelish of heart to the falvation itself.-There is a want of love to fuch falvation as we need-to fuch light as fhines in the character of JESUS CHRIST, and in the holy character and law of Therefore, if men do not come favingly GOD. to this light, fome evil in their deeds, and deeds always betray the heart, is the caufe of their delay. If there be blame, it falls on themfelves .--I know the mighty power of God's Spirit is neceffary to fave finners-to make them truly religious and bring them to JESUS; but it is an oppolition of heart to the falvation itfelf, which makes the neceffity. So that the realon men do not come favingly to this light, is becaufe their deeds are evil. They difapprove fo holy, fo pure, fo GoD exalting, foul humbling a light as that which fhines in the gofpel.—This is that guilty ftate of human nature, which JESUS CHRIST folemnly defcribed in the words of our text.—May the Lord, who is infinite in mercy and fovereign in his goodnefs, have compaffion on us all; and draw us by his power to the true light, that we may be faved from our fins and made forever bleffed. AMEN.

SERMON IX.

The connection between fin and mifery.

ISAIAH Ivii. 21.

THERE is no peace, faith my GOD, to the wicked.

THOSE who practife fin are feeking happinefs. None love their own peace better, though they are going directly away from it. Among all delufions, it is one of the greateft, to hope fin will end happily; yet, it appears that evil men act under the influence of fuch hope. In many cafes, they feem to expect, what they know to be impoffible; and after a thoufand experiments which have ended miferably, rufh again, with high expectations, into the fame difappointing fcenes.

WE have the greatest evidence, that finners, while they remain such, cannot find a fatisfying happines. There is the word of a true and infinite GoD, who created all things, gave a particular nature to every object, and appointed the laws by which all things material and intellectual exist, act, perceive and feel. All things are, and ever will be, in his hand. We have the evidence of experience that he is true; alfo, it may be inferred, from fuch other perfections of an infinite nature, as he clearly poffestes. If there were no evidence, befide his word, of the connection between fin and mifery, this would be fufficient to conclude the point; and every finner, ought to depend on being wretched, until his heart is changed. But in this cafe we have other evidence. We need not depend on abstract speculations, drawn from the nature of GoD; nor need we depend folely on his word, for nature with which we are acquainted, the laws of existence under which we act and feel, and experience which gains strength every day, confirm the truth of revelation, that, there is no peace for the wicked. They have no prefent peace, and there is no foundation, in the existing nature of things, for them ever to obtain it. To be carnally minded is death, or misery. The death is begun -it hath been felt by every finner, and must continue until fin is taken away. So that the unholy are, as much, acting against the appearances of nature and experience, as they be against the word of God. This necessary exposure to unhappinefs, is not confined to fuch as perpetrate the most atrocious crimes, nor to fuch as give themfelves away to indecent appetites; but is common to finners of every description.

By the wicked, the text means all unholy perfons—all who do not love GoD and his law—all who have not been delivered by fanctifying grace, from their natural depravity. In the verfes before the text, GoD defcribes himfelf to be the giver of all true peace. There is, alfo, a defcription of thofe, who are capable of receiving, and to whom it is given. Thus faith the high and lofty one that inhabiteth cternity, whofe name is holy, I dwell in the high and holy place ; with him alfo that is of a humble and contrite spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.-For the iniquity of his covetousness, was I wroth and finote him .- He went on frowardly in the way of his heart. I have feen his ways, and will heal him : I will lead him alfo and restore comforts to him, and his mourners. I create the fruit of the lips; peace, peace to him that is far off and to him that is near, faith the Lord, and I will heal him. It is the humble and contrite heart, that is healed by GoD, and receiveth happiness. Then immediately follows a defcription of finners .- But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my GoD, to the wicked.

THE image is both forcible and juft. As the pullution of the turbulent fea, is caft up by its own waters, and comes from its own bottom; fothe finner's want of peace, and his mifery comes from the flate of his heart. I will illustrate the following truth.

THERE is a neceffary connection between fin and mifery, fo that all unholy minds fall fhort of the happiness they feek, and plunge themselves into eternal misery.

By neceffary connection, I mean a certainty from the condition of things, and those natural laws under which they exist and act. To have it otherwise, another conflictution must be given, to intellectual moral and material existence, which is perhaps impossible, and certainly not best. None can expect the certainty of a connection between fin and misery, to be made plainer, than it is told in the word of GoD ; but it may be useful to inform the finner, that all nature around him, and his own experience, if he would obferve it, confpire with the fcriptures, to warn him of his forlorn cafe, and urge a fpeedy repentance, left the day of grace fail, and he fall under the wrath, from which there is no deliverance. We may go through the univerfe, and everything flows the certain mifery of finners, and that there is no continuing peace to the wicked.

I. LET me begin by appealing to the finner's own feelings, and inquire of him, whether he hath ever found the peace and happinefs which he fought. He may fay, he hath found fome happinefs. This I will grant, and fhall afterwards fhow, that it doth not militate againft the truth I am urging. Can any finner fay he hath found contentment found a fatisfying portion, with which his heart was placed at reft, fo that he wifhed nothing more, than a continued enjoyment of his attained good. The unholy perfon hopes to do it, in his own way; but whether he hopes, and whether he hath obtained, are two queftions. He hath been, and ftill continues hoping vainly, and the continued difappointment is mifery.

LET us for a moment, fuppofe a thing which cannot be. That it was lawful, and no divine anger would rife against the attempt to put himfelf and the creatures, in the place of GoD, and love them fupremely. This he hath done in the face of a divine threatening; but we will suppose the threatening taken away, and no fear of an offended GoD. Does he find in himself a fund of enjoyment? After he hath loved himself as he ought to love GoD, doth he find his own nature or any thing in himself, an object commensurate to his defires. With his whole felf for a portion, doth he not find an emptines, a want, a distreffing thirs for fomething more? Suppose, that with fuch a nature and mind as he hath, he were placed at an infinite diftance from all other objects, to contemplate, to know, to enjoy himfelf without molestation ; his folitude from other objects, and confinement to felf-companionship, would be a hell to him. A creature, who is the God of his own affections, if the cafe hath been stated truly, in himself, hath a miserable idol. The mind of man was formed by the all-wife creator to be happified by the love of meet and glorious objects without itfelf. There is no proportion, between the whole quantity and excellence of a created mind, and its powers of loving and defiring. No object, less than infinite, can fatisfy the heart of a finite creature. This confinement of the affections to himfelf must therefore entail mifery on the depraved mind.

2dly. IF we take in all the creatures as objects of enjoyment, these also are infufficient to fatisfy, and the unhappinefs remains. King Solomon made the experiment, fo far as can be done with the greatest advantages, and as the nature of the creatures admits, and having made it, wrote the univerfal motto, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. Men often look forward in expectancy, to certain bounds of obtainment, and promise themselves, with thefe to be happy. Indeed, this delufion is the finner's happinefs, and when it ceafes his happinefs will ceafe with it, and defpair take the place of all his expectations. He thinks, if he could attain to fuch a point of honor, wealth, or means of fenfual gratification, he might have peace, and fay to himfelf, as the fool recorded in revelation, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But the finner, who faid this, had not attained contentment, for his barns were still to be pulled down, and larger ones built. Before this was done, his naked loul was called away from the whole. So it ever is. Life is not long enough to obtain happiness in the creatures, and if it were an eternity, the difficulty would not be removed. There is nothing in the nature of the creatures, to fatisfy that fenfe of want and emptinels, which purfues the foul after it is alienated from GoD. Therefore, we find by experience, the world cannot take away the mifery of an unholy heart. Something is still wanted. There is no contentment-fome unfatisfied wifh, and generally a thousand of them remain. Something is feared; and if not of men, there is a dread of God, a dread of futurity and another world. If power be given to the grafping mind, beyond certain limits, perfonal ability to act ceafes, and others must execute. Here jealoufy arifes, fo that the thirst for power, and the supposed possession of it, become a scourge. If riches become immenfe, the care of watching them is still more immenfe, and a great evil. There is nothing in all thefe things to remove the want and mifery of a finful heart. Nature itself forbids an intelgent fpirit to be made happy by the creatures of this world. The finner is alienated from his GOD, and his affections are terminated on himfelf. As this is not an object to fatisfy, his lufts rove abroad among the other creatures, thinking thence to fupply the want. Thefe, beyond the fupply of natural wants, are empty alfo, and the tranfgreffor remains miferable. He, who might be happy by giving back his heart to GoD, and by contentment with fo much of the world as would fupply the real wants of his nature, is daily fuffering the death of mifery that follows a carnal mind. The penalty of the law hath taken hold of him, and in many refpects he feels the beginSerm. IX. between fin and mifery.

ning of eternal death. Every unfatisfied finner is a living witnefs of JEHOVAH's truth, when he faid, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt furely die.

3dly. A GUILTY confcience is the natural confequence of fin, and becomes a fruitful fource of mifery. There must be an inward struggle, between the affections of the heart which are depraved, and reafon and confcience, which forbid fin. Evil men have evidence of truth and duty-they feel a natural conviction of what is right-how they ought to treat GOD and his commandments, and of the divine authority over them. The word and providence of GoD is continually reminding them of their duty, and their obligation to obey. Their hearts refift this information, and go abreaft to the rational judgment. A conflict is raifed in the mind, fo that the man is divided against himself; his heart against his reafon and confcience, which must be a state of wretchedness. This unhappiness of a guilty con-fcience is often great in this world, and we have reafon to fuppofe, that in another it will be the gnawing worm that never dies. By a guilty confcience the finner becomes an accufer, a judge, and an executioner to himfelf. He forms the charge, is the witnefs, and is unable to plead not guilty. This part of his punishment is inbred, and must be coeval with his existence, unless removed by the fanctifying grace of God. The spirit of a man may sustain his infirmities ; but a wounded fpirit who can bear ? An innocent fufferer feels a fortitude to endure, and his confcious integrity gives him a ftrength almost above mortal. The guilty are deprived of all natural fortitude, and fink in despair under the weight of their wretchednefs. No flight is possible, either from an injured GOD, or from themfelves; and after the prefent day of grace is paffed, there will be no alternative of peace, and all the pain of being confcious finners muft be endured.

FURTHER, fundry of the finful paffions include pain in their very exercife. This is the cafe with impatience, fretfulnefs, anger, malice, hatred, and fundry other wicked affections of the heart. To hate or to be impatient is to be miferable, and must thus remain.

Alfo, the difappointment of finners, must make them unhappy. So long as God reigns, the devices of the wicked shall fail, and their pride be confounded, fo that they cannot attain their defires. We all know the pain of difappointment. When the finner is brought to his final punishment, the pain of difappointment must be extreme.

3dly. THE focial nature and relations are an inlet of great peace, or of an aggravated mifery.

THE finful, can have no peace in the focial relations and affections, after all reftraint is taken off from their evil hearts. To answer the prefent purposes of redeeming wisdom there are many reftraints on the unholy. Acting from selfiss principles they now form fome alliances, which have a degree of peace, and fome hours of harmony. But let finners be removed to a condition of existing, which doth not admit of alliances formed on selfiss motives, and there will be a total end of harmony. All will be discord, oppofition, enmity, and mutual injury.

THE prefent ministration of finners to their mutual comfort, arifes from the fingular nature of the flate in which God hath placed us, and not from any natural tendency in finful affections to unite and do good. Let wicked fouls be taken from these bodies, and from this worldly state, in which they can be mutually advantageous, and placed in a condition where they have no perfonal benefit to expect; there will be no friendship, no mutual aid-no comforting expresfions of benevolence. We may learn this from the events of time. The union of the wicked is short. Self-interest unites them, excites their zeal, their protestations of fidelity and love; and in the revolution of events, felf-interest again separates and fills them with enmity, even to a thirst of blood.-We need no other proof, how unholy minds are united. The apostle James gives us this idea, when he fays, From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts. Ye lust, and have not : ye kill, and defire to have, and cannot obtain : ye fight and war, yet ye have not. That the wicked can have no peace, in focial relations and affections, after all restraint is taken off from their hearts, is eviden. ced by the nature of depravity.

4thly. THE wicked are made miferable by their knowledge of GoD's true character.

THEY may be pleafed with him, thro' a mifconception of what his character really is. They may think him fuch an one as themfelves ; that he will approve the things they love; protect and blefs them abundantly in all the defigns of their hearts, fo that through his providence they expect to rife higher, than they could by any other means.—But all thefe pleafing contemplations arife from a falfe opinion of his nature and will. A fight of his true character, always makes the wicked miferable ; for it difcovers him oppofed to their whole temper, their defires, their actions, and the objects of their love.—God prefcribes one rule of right, one object of chief affection; the evil heart another. A direct opposition arifes to the divine character, and every attribute of his nature is dreaded. Even his goodnefs is difliked, for having an object different from the finner's wifhes .- His justice and righteoufnels are dreaded .--- His knowledge and power infure fuccess to a government, conducted on principles, which are difapproved by the heart.-His immutability makes it certain, that his government and purpofes will always be the fame.---Thus every divine attribute is feared. The certainty of being always under the control of an infinite being, who is difliked ; the certainty of his displeasure, and of perpetual disappointment, will fix the foul in deep despair. This character of GOD is now fet before the unholy, both by natural and revealed evidence. The evidence will be forever increasing, and the point of opposition between a holy GOD and wicked creatures coming into more diffinct view ; a view glorious for him, and confounding to them. I might go much farther, in defcribing the mifery of wicked minds, which neceffarily arifes from the conftruction and laws of created exiftence, as they are, at prefent, brought to our knowledge by experience.

5thly. To place the matter beyond all doubt, GOD hath affured us there is no peace to the wicked; and that the connection between fin and mifery which now appears, fhall continue forever.

HE who created and upholds the universe, and knows his own purposes, can neither deceive nor be mistaken. How prefumptuous! How unfounded in respect of probability, and how much without excuse, is the hope of the wicked to prosper in fin. The word of infinite truth forbids the thing; and when we see all nature preSerm. IX. between fin and mifery.

pared to fulfil this word, and actually doing it every moment, the delufion appears like madnefs. The wicked in heart, may turn to their own experience in felf-enjoyment, and in an enjoyment of the creatures ; to their own experience in the focial relations; to their own knowledge of God, and find a confirmation of facred truth, that a fearful punishment is prepared for all who difobey. There is every reafon to fuppofe, that as the divine government progreffes, new fources of forrow to the finful will be opened .- The fcripture plainly intimates one which I have not yet mentioned. By an immediate act of divine power, God will imprefs a fenfe of his displeafure on the guilty. It will be a fearful thing, to fall into the hands of the living GOD.

To all this, the wicked may object, that they have found fome happines in the principles and practice of fin, and therefore the preceding 'arguments do not absolutely exclude their fafety.

LET us attend to the kind of happines finners may now have, and why it is permitted by a holy GoD, for a short season.

THE greatest part of their happines is in hope or expectation, and not the peace of enjoying a prefent good. Their expectations are contrary to nature, and the fulfilment of them impossible. Their happines therefore, is all a delusion, and must cease in the light of eternity. God now fuffers it, that the blinding, deceiving nature of fin in the heart may appear; but it will not continue in the world of retribution.

THE unholy do alfo enjoy worldly happinefs, they are fed, have animal pleafure, the waters of a full cup are often poured out to them, they enjoy finful objects, and fport themfelves with their own deceivings. Infinite wifdom hath a reafon for fuffering this. If the condition of finners did not admit happiness of this nature, the world would not befitted for the ingathering of CHRIST's church, as infinite wisdom defigned it should be. We have before shown, that in all this, there is no enjoyment which amounts to true peace of mind. It is not a happiness from moral qualities of the heart, delighting in excellent objects; but folely from the particular structure of things, in this transitory world, and when taken from it, their quiet will cease. When divine long-fuffering hath ended, other scenes will commence, and the divine prediction have a complete fulfilment, there is no peace to the wicked.

1. THIS fubject teaches us, how much the word, of GoD is confirmed, by the established laws of nature. In the prefent day, many either really do or affect to difbelieve the holy fcriptures. Some fpeak of them with great levity ; and many difobey in the most careless manner. They especially try to reject the reprefentations of mifery that is coming on fin. Such perfons are ftrangely deluded. Their eyes are as much shut on nature, as on the word of GOD, and they do not know what a task they have taken on themselves in attempting to overturn revelation. To do it, they must first overturn nature itseif, that is, the eftablished laws under which minds exist, act, and are acted upon, in the intelligent univerfe. Many doctrines of God's word are proved by reafon and experience. If the holy fcriptures, contained a fcheme of truth, which appeared, in all refpects, unfounded in nature and experience, it would be a hard thing to prove their certainty; but this is not the cafe. Nature and experience confirm the being of a Gon-they confirm many things concerning his character, which the fcrip, tures teach-they flow us the fitnefs of the moral law-the tendency of a virtuous temper and practice to produce happines, and of fin to produce mifery. They teach us a connection between fin and mifery. When we read divine threatenings against fin, and then look on the human mind and a focial state, and behold a natural preparation to fulfil these threatenings; it must be a great evidence of truth. Those, who feel a fixed unholinefs of heart, and a rifing opposition to the doctrines of revelation, are hoping for fafety against all probability. If they will first overturn the preparation in nature to punifh them; we will then give the fcriptures up to their rage. If they will make the creatures fatisfying to the foul; if they will make the felfish depravity of the heart confiftent with focial happiness, and destroy its tendency to mifery; if they will convince us a fight of God's true character, may give peace to an unholy heart, there will be fome room for them to contend with the fcriptures of God. Until these things can be done, though all written threatenings were destroyed, the danger of milery is not removed, nor its caufe in any degree taken away.

Some great truths of revelation will not admit natural evidence of their certainty. Such, are the way and means of falvation by JESUS CHRIST, and for evidence of their certainty, we must depend wholly on the revealed word. Other truths do admit a natural evidence from reason and experience; such, as the connection between fin and misery. When we find reason, experience and revelation, perfectly harmonious, concerning all truth which admits both kinds of evidence; we may thence determine, that revelation may be firmly trusted, in all things which admit no other kind of evidence. A creature must be mad indeed to reject their united testimony.

2dly. THE natural connection between fin and mifery, fhows the folly of men, in hoping fo favorably of their flate, while defititute of evidence, that the reigning power of fin in their hearts is broken.

LAW and gofpel harmonize in the fame fcheme of holinefs. What avails a gofpel to fuch hearts as are oppofed to the gofpel fpirit? If mifery muft be connected with fin, what avails a gofpel to thofe, who are as much under the power of fin, as they ever were? It follows, that they are as much under the power of mifery as they ever were; and have no releafe from the curfe. So long, as fin reigns in the heart, the curfe will reign over the whole man. So long, as fin is fupremely loved, the penalty is in execution, tho' not to the extreme degree, it will be after a day of grace is ended.

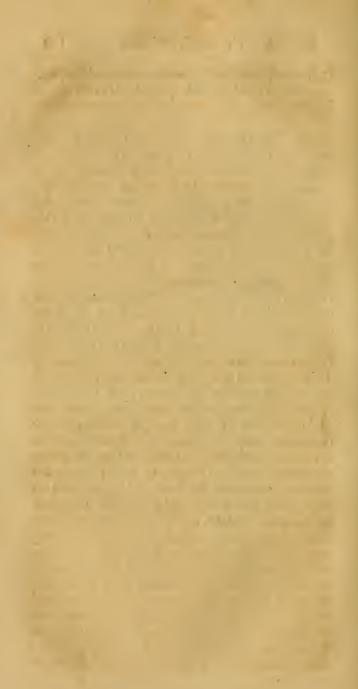

THERE is a class of perfons who believe the fcripture-who believe that impenitent fin will be punished-who also confess they have no reafon to think their own hearts changed; and still they are in perfect fecurity. I request fuch to look on their own conduct-to confider and mark it well, and fay if it be not flrange. A rational creature, with knowledge of his danger, a danger for eternity, and yet not taking a fingle ftep to efcape it. Living without any anxiety, without prayer, and fpending in ufelefs amufement the only time, which was given for preparation. All this is done, against the admonition of GOD in his word, and in full knowledge of the miferable end to which fin is coming, and even under the beginning execution of the penalty, for fuch are all the pains and diftreffes of the finner's life.

Serm. IX. between fin and mifery.

By this fecurity the folly of fin is proved, beyond what we could fuppofe poffible if we did not fee it.

3dly. THOSE, who fall under final punifhment will not be able to plead, that they have come to an unhappy end without warning.

God hath warned them in his word, in his law and in his gospel. He warns them every day of life. All the miferable fruits of fin in this world-all our pains of body and mind-all diffatisfaction of the heart in its present worldly attainments-all the ftings of confcience-all the painful feelings of finful paffion-all the mutual enmities and hatred of wicked men-all the dread of GoD's prefence-all thefe are warnings that the wages of fin is death. With what remorfe and felf-condemnation must the mind look back, on its prefent blindnefs and fecurity .---This conviction will ftop the mouth, though it will neither change the heart, nor remove its pains. May the view we have taken of the natural connection between fin and mifery, excite us to repentance and to feek deliverance from our own unholinefs .- Let us blefs GoD for a way of escape opened in the gospel, and pray for his Spirit to accompany the means of grace, and to draw us to the blood of CHRIST for cleanfing from all fin. AMEN.

SERMON X.

Regeneration.

JOHN i. 13.

Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flefb, nor of the will of man, but of GOD.

I man, by nature, be wholly depraved, and unlike to GoD, it is neceffary he fhould be changed, before his falvation and bleffednefs in the divine prefence is poffible. There muft be a moral conformity of temper for the happinefs of communion. The want of this conformity makes finful creatures oppofed to GoD's pleafure, repine againft his government, and feek their own happinefs in fuch a way as his foul hateth. This is the real cafe with men, and even with feeking finners before their hearts are renewed. The falvation which they feek is not the fame falvation, which the gofpel offers, and the heaven they defire, is effentially different from the glorious life of communion enjoyed by the Saviour and his people. The two doctrines, of man's total depravity, and the need of regeneration for eternal life, ftand or fall together. JEsus CHRIST expressly taught both of them, and on their truth depends the need of his incarnation and atonement.

The doctine of regeneration is much oppofed in a finful world, and among those who confels it, many endeavour to explain away the spirituality and greatness of the change. One reafon of their opposition is, that the need of regeneration, implies the natural and total wickednefs of the heart; a charge which they are unwilling to own, and a condemnation to which they do not intend to fubmit. Another reason of opposition and doubt, is ignorance of their own hearts. Confcience is afleep, reafon is blinded by appetite, worldly interests and fenfual pleafures poffefs all their thoughts, and they very little confider God, their own character, or eternity. In this ftate they feel no difeafe, and therefore no need of a change; no guilt, and therefore no need of forgiveness; no fense of moral obligation, and therefore no fear of God's anger.---When the Holy Spirit comes to convince finners, they have new apprehensions on these subjects; and tho' conviction of fin doth not imply holinefs or a new heart, they are made fenfible of a threatening law, and an angry God. Alfo, though they have no just idea of the gracious exercises and peace which follow regeneration, they still suppose there must be fome change, before they can be happy.

WE are told in the verfe before the text, that as many as received CHRIST, to them gave he power to become the fons of GoD, even to them that believe on his name. The text, which follows, defcribes thefe perfons by the change of their hearts. Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of GoD. This teaches us, that none but regenerated perfons, have received CHRIST and become the fons of GoD, fo as to receive eternal life. All others are exposed to the curfe of the law and wholly unprepared for death. Their anxiety for falvation, if they have had any, their use of means, their doctrinal belief, and every other poffible attainment fhort of a new and holy heart, has left them in the miferable state of unpardoned finners. The heart of man cannot be brought into conformity to God by any pains used, or any means short of a spir-itual renovation. Fear and other causes which may check the excess and fensible out-breakings of fin, do not change the temper of the foul.

THE Holy Spirit is the great and immediate agent in renewing the heart, and without his work in applying, deliverance is impoffible .---Therefore JESUS CHRIST represented fin against the Holy Ghoft, as the most dangerous of all fins. And it becomes those who think lightly of the Spirit's work in redeeming men, to examine the fubject, left they fall under the guilt of unpardonable fin. I will

I. EXPLAIN what kind or description of finners, are commonly the fubjects of a gracious regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

II. In what regeneration confifts.

III. MENTION fome holy exercises or affections which follow a renovation of the heart by the Spirit of GoD, and are evidence of the change.

I. I AM to explain what kind or defcription of finners, are commonly the fubjects of a gracious regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

DOUBTLESS it is those who are convinced of fin, and in their own apprehension flain by the law. I am fensible it doth not become us to limit the gracious power of GoD, and positively to fay, he never changed the heart of a person in deep fecurity; but still we have no right to think it is the case. Such an opinion is not encouraged either by foripture or experience; also it is dangerous to entertain it; and has a tendency to fear the confcience and fink unholy men into deep stupidity and the worst of crimes.

SINNERS feel no motives but fear and a love of themfelves, to feek religious inftruction, and if on the teftimony of others they fuppofe a change of their hearts to be neceffary; ftill, if they think thofe who are in a ftate of fecurity to be probable fubjects of GoD's renewing power, they will neglect all means to obtain religious inftruction or to difcover their own fin and guilt.

NEITHER does there feem to be a preparation for the exercife of grace by the renewed heart, which hath been previoufly infenfible of fin, of guilt, of enmity against GOD and his law .- Such a mind would fee, neither the wonderful love, nor fovereign grace of GOD in fanctifying and forgiving, nor the bitter opposition there was in the heart before its change, nor be fenfible of the diametrical oppofition there is between fin and holinefs, in their nature, defires, and end of action. CHRIST tells us it is finners, doubtlefs meaning, anxious, convinced finners, whom he calls to repentance-that it is the fick who need the physician. The apostle fays, The law is a school master to bring us to CHRIST. That without the law men think themfelves alive, or whole, and we know one use of the law is to convince of fin in heart and life, and make us very concerned for deliverance.

THEREFORE, we have no reason to expect that fecure finners, who give themfelves no trouble about fin, escaping it, and the falvation of their fouls, will be renewed by the Spirit of GOD while they are in this state .- Should it happen it would be a strange thing, and the subferviency of one part of perfonal experience to another, would be loft. Nor have we reafon to expect any will be changed, who are infenfible of a finful heart, as appears to be the cafe with many, who will yet allow they have committed visible transgreffions.—Such fecure perfons are eminently in the broad road to ruin. They are not earneftly attempting any thing for their own falvation; nor is there any intimation that God ever defigns to fave them. If we faw them awakened by his action on their confciences, though their hearts are enmity against him we might hope, that by his mighty power their hearts would yet be changed, and that he is preparing the way for a rich difplay of his power; as, he who awakens can alfo renew. The fecurity of fuch perfons chills our hope for them .- They are blind, and know it not; in peril, and fear it not; and GOD is leaving them in ignorance of their difease and death. This deep fecurity concerning perfonal falvation, and this ignorance of a heart naturally estranged from God, are most dark omens concerning the perfons, places and times in which they happen; for when the Spirit of GoD in his convincing and fanctifying operations is withdrawn, the doctrines and inftitutions of the gofpel will have no faving effect.

THERE cannot be religion without feeling, deep feeling, and fuch feeling as makes every thing in this world appear fmall in comparison with our eternal well-being. Therefore CHRIST W directs us to watch and pray, to ftrive and agonize that we may enter into the kingdom of heaven. Those perfons are building on a fandy foundation, who fuppofe, if they keep themfelves free from visible crimes, and live what is commonly called a moral life, their flate is fafe enough, without any anxiety concerning another world. It is true that all who have the gofpel morality are fafe, for this is the fame as evangelical holinefs, and includes, faith, repentance, a love of GoD, mourning for fin, felf-denial and watching against the motions of fin, much examination of the heart and prayer to GOD for his affistance. If this be meant by a moral life, it is through the grace of GOD connected with falvation. Every thing fhort of this may be found in those, who have not been taught their own miferable ftate; and though men cannot accufe them of crimes, they are in a fecure ignorance of God, their own flate, and eternity. Neither is there any prospect, of their ever becoming the subjects of a gracious regeneration, until they are in another manner convinced of fin and milery, and the danger of enduring the wrath to come. An effectual conviction, of these truths, will make people ferious and temperate, and it is eafy to difcover the deep inquiry of their minds, What fhall we do to be faved.

IN the conviction of fin, which ufually precedes a gracious change of heart, the finner is made deeply fenfible of the following things.

God's difpleafure against fin of every kind, both of heart and life, of omiffion and commiffion, and that his anger refts on those who are not forgiven; fo, that it is ftrange they are not confumed by his punishment. The reality of the divine law, and its penalty, together with the certain danger of fin; and under a fense of this danger, he is furprized at his past life of fecurity, and wonders how he made himfelf easy, when so often told of his exposed state.

HE fees a life full of fins, of which he formerly had no fufpicion. The fecurity for which he used to justify himself—his contemptuous neglect of GoD—his prayerles life—his injurious reflections on those who were anxious for falvation—his misimprovement of time—his profaning the holy fabbath and neglect of GoD's word, are now a heavy burden on his confcience.

HE is also led to look within, and find an inward fountain of transgreffion. Sinfulnels of heart, before this, was a hearfay thing to him; but now he finds, a heart that is hard, and a will unbroken. He fees those inward lusts, which like a fountain flow forth in ftreams of tranfgreffion. When crouded by the terrors of the law, he finds enmity against the commandment and GOD who gave it, and though he dare not contemptuoufly avow fuch feelings, a confcioufnefs of them, convinces him of the depravity of his heart. A rational conviction of the fin in his heart, of divine justice, and the certain penalty of the law, affure him that his flate is deplorable. He now feels a truth which was never realized by him before, which is, that he shall remain a finner, miferable, and under the curfe of the law, if God doth not deliver him by his own mighty power. Once he fuppofed it was an eafy thing to become religious indeed, fo as to attain a confcioufness of pardon; now, it appears to him a thing impossible without help from GoD, which he has no right to claim. He finds an oppofing will and hard heart, to be the unmanageable enemies of his falvation, which none but GOD can remove, and thus defpairs in himfelf. This defpair in himfelf takes place, before he has any delight in the truth.

It is ufual for God, to produce this conviction of fin, and felf-defpair, before he gracioufly changes the heart. There is a fitnefs the creature thould know his own fipiritual impotency and guilt in the divine fight, before he receives mercy.

But though I have urged the need of these convictions, in order to show secure men, there is no probability of their receiving divine grace, in the present condition of their minds; it is proper for me to caution all, against expecting their inquiries, convictions and duties will renew their hearts.

TRUE holinefs, flowing out in the exercifes of faith and repentance, is a fruit of renewing power-a fruit of the fpirit's fanctifying operation in the heart. On the one hand, it is dangerous to deny the need and use of these convictions; fo, on the other, it is a dangerous error to fuppofe the inquiring, convinced finner is gradually becoming holy, and in a flow manner acquiring a moral conformity to GOD; or that his reigning temper, is not as fixedly oppofed to holinefs as it ever was in any period of his life. It is true, that the out-breakings of a finful heart, may not be to visible to mankind; but why is it fo? Only through the reftraint of fear. In this cafe, the finner himfelf, when convinced, will allow his heart to be growing in hardnefs. It is alfo true, that his cafe appears more hopeful to all pious beholders', who are acquainted with GoD's ufual manner of recovering finners, but why is it more hopeful? Not becaufe his terrors, convictions, and efforts for deliverance make him more worthy of mercy; for in all these efforts, he has been moved by unholy motives. Not becaufe thefe things have begot a fmall particle of holinefs, or made one begin to grow which was natural in the heart. They have not begotten a fmall particle of holinefs; nor is there any one natural in the fallen heart. Grace or holinefs, when begotten in the heart by the fpirit of GoD, is a thing entirely new; a thing of which there was no degree, or to which there was any likenefs, before a divine renovation. The fuperior hopefulnefs of the finner's fituation, arifes entirely, from the tendency of inquiry and conviction to bring the mind into fuch a ftate, as GOD choofes guilty creatures fhould feel themfelves to bein, before he in fovereignty grants renewing grace. He renovates, of his own good pleafure, and acts by motives drawn from within himfelf, and from the nature of his government.

THE purpole of infinite wildom, in the progrels of this work, is to teach the guilty creature he is a finner, which he never feelingly apprehended before; to fhow him his impotency, that he has a heart guilty, oppoled to GoD, and which he cannot change. That the impoflibility of changing his own heart arifes from the ftubbornnels of his will, or the excels of fin that is in him; and allo to prepare him for the exercise of holy affections, when GOD is pleafed to give them.

WHEN public teachers or private chriftians, are called to inftruct anxious fouls, it is a matter of great importance, to teach them the danger of relapfing into fecurity, by which their deliverance, will be rendered improbable; alfo, to affure them there is no holinefs and compliance with the gofpel, and that they are not becoming more worthy of forgivenefs by any thing done in compliance with their fears, and folely to efcape from danger. An endeavor, either to quench thefe convictions, or to make any believe they effentially alter the moral ftate of the heart, is, in the ftriking language of the prophet, daubing the wall with untempered mortar, and fewing pillows under the arms, to give fecurity where conficience ought to be kept awake.

OUR text is very explicit in afcribing a gracious change of heart to the direct and immediate power of Gon-which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flift, nor of the will of man, but of God. This facred defcription not only excludes means, as having any efficiency of any kind, in changing the heart ; but alfo goes much further, and affures us that the change is not according to the finner's own will, that is, he doth not defire fuch a change as this is. The terrors of a miferable end, which have been thrown in his way by the providence and Spirit of God, have made him wifh for fome change, for fome efcape from milery, fome deliverance from the pains of a wounded confcience ; he is alfo convinced that whatever the change be, GOD must be the author; but all his pains and fears have not brought him to will or choofe fuch a change as the golpel regeneration is, therefore it is not according to the will of man. And it is doubtlefs true, when GoD, renews an unholy foul, which hath been afking much of him, the particular favor granted is an unfought one, and granted by fovereign grace.

II. I AM to defcribe in what regeneration confifts.

IN defcribing this change, the word of GOD makes use of the highest expressions, denoting both the special power and action of GOD, and the newness of the thing produced. It is not the modification of any moral principle, which previoufly exifted in the mind, but the production of one that is new. It is called a renewing by the tpirit —being born of incorruptible feed—born of the will of Gop—a new birth—a new creation—old things paffing away, and all things becoming new —a new heart, with a multitude of other expreffions, the ftrongeft poffible, denoting the immediate agency of Gop in the production of a new moral principle, or a new heart.

THE heart or the will and affections are the feat of this change; therefore, the increase of doctrinal or fpeculative knowledge, be the degree ever fo great, hath no tendency to regenerate a perfon. Doctrinal light hath its feat in the understanding, and it is contrary to all experience, that more knowledge of an object, to which the heart or will is for its very nature opposed, will change the opposition into love. We may know this from the objects of love and hatred, which daily occur in the experience of life. If the tafte of mind be opposed to the very nature of an object, the more the object is feen, the more an oppofing tafte will exert itfelf .- The divine action in regenerating an unholy foul is, therefore, on the heart, or the will and affections.

WHAT we call a new moral principle, may alfo be called a new tafte, relifh, temper, difpofition, or habit of feeling refpecting moral objects and truth. Words are not effential if ideas be according to truth. In the holy fcriptures, the words heart and will, mean the fame power or faculty in the mind, and it is that faculty in which holinefs exifts, and on which GoD acts in renewing finners.

THE manner of divine acting in this inflance of creation, is as much above our conception as it was in the creation of the worlds. It is only the effects of his action, which are fenfible to the perfon who hath experienced it. He finds in himfelf a new principle of moral love-a new relifh or tafte-a new temper-new feelings towards moral objects. He hath not done it himfelf. Though through fear of punishment he wished a change, he finds this to be another kind of change from what he wished, and infinitely more excellent. He feels, that it is above the power of means or any thing he hath done, to make fuch an alteration in his heart.-That it is a great change and worthy of GoD to make-that his moral feelings are indeed become new. The objects and the fins he once loved are now his aversion, and Goo himself, truth and duty, in which he had no pleafure, are become agreeable to his heart. This change of moral principle or tafte, is that renewing by the fpirit, or new birth which our Saviour declares to be neceffary for feeing the kingdom of heaven, and of which he fays, The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the found thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; fo is every one that is born of the fpirit. That is, the manner of divine acting is unknown, the moment of divine acting is unperceived, the creature is paffive in his change; but by the effects of the change, after he hath had opportunity for deliberate felf-attention, he knows it hath happened. All the difpute, which fome have raifed concerning the direct agency of God, and a kind of regeneration partially effected by the creature's previous endeavours to become right, will ceafe in those, who have became real fubjects of the change, Feeling what it is by its effects, and comparing them with what they were before, as effectually convinces them of an Almighty moral creator; as a confciousness of their own existence, and the furrounding creation doth of the natural creator.

REGENERATION is that change from which holy exercises proceed, and is therefore the beginning of fpiritual life in the foul. It is the beginning of that moral conformity to GOD, which is the true preparation for heaven and its bleffednefs. Though many, who have never experienced regeneration, think they wish for heaven; the real object of their wish is an ideal heaven, which never existed, and is effentially different from that holy state and place, which GOD will forever fill with his glory.

THERE will always be a ftrong temptation, with unholy minds, to deny the need of this change; and fuch a denial, in most cases, is the first step towards infidelity. There is a greater and more prefent temptation, to deny the need of an efficacious work of GoD's spirit renewing the heart, than there is to question the need of CHRIST's atonement. This doctrine of a new heart, more directly brings home the charge of depravity and the neceffity of our immediate departure from all fin, to escape the punishment of GoD; which becomes a prefent and a ftrong temptation to deny the need of a change. A willingness to escape mifery is common to men both good and bad; but it is only the fanctified, who are willing to leave fin; and though the effectual means of deliverance are purchased, it is natural to refift and deny the need of their operation. To guard ourfelves against fuch fatal refistance, we ought to remember the words of CHRIST, which accord with the whole tenor of fcripture, Verily, verily, I fay unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of Gop, X

III. I SHALL next mention fome holy exercises or affections, which follow a renewing of the heart by the fpirit of GoD, and are evidence of the change.

IT is of infinite importance that we judge right of the ftate of our own hearts. Confidering the great confequences that depend, the bare poffibility of a mistake should make us examine; but in this matter, there is more than a bare poffibility. The word of GoD tells us that many shall be deceived. There is great difficulty in knowing the heart, not becaufe the nature of holinefs is uncertain or badly defined, in the fcriptures; but from the deceitfulnefs of the heart itfelf. There are powerful temptations, to make us think our ftate good when it is really bad; and we have reafon to fear multitudes will be deceived, and go with clofed eyes into the eternal world. ' To prevent this, we fhould acquaint ourfelves with the nature of those holy affections, which evidence a change.

GOD is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in Gon-He that loveth is born of Gon-Love is of GOD, and every one that loweth is born of GOD, and knoweth God. Love, is the most appropriate as well as comprehensive name of gracious affections, which is used in the holy fcriptures. Holy exercifes are a conformity to the law, which faith, thou shalt love GOD with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thyself. Every one who is born of God loves the divine character, as exhibited in his works and word, and wifhes well to his being, bleffednefs and government. He is more pleafed that GOD is bleffed and glorious, than with any perfonal advantage.-He choofes that every thing should be fubordinate to the divine will and the exaltment of GoD, and when he begins to pray, forgets himfelf until he hath faid,

Father glorify thyfelf. Although an unholy man may think he loves GoD, his love, whatever it be, on examination is found to terminate in himfelf; and he loves JEHOVAH, only becaufe he is his own acknowledged GoD, haskept and done him much good, and will blefs and fave him in time to come. The love of a new heart, feels the perfection and excellence of God to deserve praise, exaltment, adoration and the most perfect obedience. He knows it is reafon enough for a whole univerfe of creatures to exift eternally, that fuch a Lord may be thereby glorified, and blefs himfelf in the fulfilment of his will. He finks in his own apprehenfion, into lefs than nothing and vanity, and the highest value of his own existence, appears to him, to arife from his fubfervience to the divine purpofes.

HE loves the providence of GoD, because it is the providence of eternal right and wifdom. A finful love of GoD is fitted only for days of perfonal profperity. While this continues, it can cry hofanna to the Son of David; but when it ceases, crucify him, crucify him. A holy love is not afraid of an adverse providence-can fuffer and praife-can be humbled and adore-can feel the rod and kifs the fmiting hand, and fay, these painful strokes are one reason why God ought to reign in absolute fovereignty. If it will glorify GOD, if it will advance the majefty and goodness of his government, let him lay me wafte, let him fmite and flay me. I cannot pray, I cannot even with the rod fhould ceafe, fo long as GOD is glorified and the interests of his holy kingdom are promoted by the continuance.

BELOVED let us love one another : for love is of Gon, and every one that loveth is born of Gon. The renovated perfon loves his brother and neigh7 bour as himfelf. And cannot the unholy finner love his neighbour? Doubtless he can, but only fo far as his neighbour's good conduces to his own. It is a love of himfelf acting through the profperity of his neighbour, and it grows no longer than fome perfonal advantage is the root of nourifhment. From this root, grow many of the neighbourly and civil alliances and amities of the world. It may ferve, in this life of trial, to make a midway state, between a heaven of glory and the place of perfect torment. God admits no fuch felfish alliances as the basis of heavenly peace. The born of God can love a brother without regard to perfonal advancement. A brother's happinels is, in its nature, fo valuable an object, there is no need of felfish inducements to love and feek. it. The holy foul, placed in a fituation to derive no advantage, except it be the happiness of acting rationally and doing good, beholds and feeks the happiness of others with most ardent defire. This benevolent love of men is an exercife peculiar to the new heart.

WHOEVER is born of GOD repents of fin. There is a felf-loathing on account of paft fins, and our liablenefs to a future relapfe. This loathing doth not arife from a fear of punifhment, for if there were none, fin would not be lefs loathed by the holy foul. The tendency of fin to injure the rights and diminifh the happinefs of focial being, is reafon enough why it should be loathed; though we are perfonally placed in fafety from its confequences. The penitent, doth not loathe fin lefs, for having been the finner who committed it, or feel any defire for felf-juftification. How deep this mourning and forrow becomes, in view of the excellent glory of God, and the injury done to him, can be conceived only by thofe, who have felt it under the fanctifying action of the bleffed Spirit.

THOSE who are born of God can fay-O how I love thy law, it is daily my delight-on thy precepts do I meditate day and night. The law of perfect holinefs is an image of God. We cannot do without it, either as a rule of duty, or as the most direct means of teaching us the infinite and glorious rectitude of GODHEAD. That commandment, from which finners turn with averfion, both on account of its holy requirements and its penalties, is the portion of the godly; and by looking on this image of their heavenly Father they daily grow in conformity to him.-Give them the written law for inftruction, and the privilege of prayer as a means of communion with their GOD, and they are ready to fay, I am as rich as I can be on this fide heaven.

BUT how fhall words defcribe that glory of GOD in the face of JESUS CHRIST and in his gofpel, which is feen by new-born fouls, and by no others. The glory of the gofpel is hid to those who are loft, who were never renewed by the Spirit. They fee no excellence in its moral nature and tendency; and the best they can confider it, is, as undefirable means of faving men from a more undefirable end. A regenerated heart perceives a fountain of glory in the gofpel which was before unperceived-a difplay of moral perfection in Gon-his glory in the face of JESUS CHRIST-the holy nature of his government and kingdom-and the higheft benevolence in communion between the unfearchable JEHOVAH and his holy creation. The method, in which the gofpel delivers from fin and mifery, adds bleffednefs to heaven, by fuch a difcovery of GOD to created minds, as could never have been without it. After renovation, the moral glory of the gospel, of its author, and of the whole plan of grace, breaks in on the mind, in fuch fucceffion, as its parts can be viewed by a finite understanding. The foul is drawn to GoD, in this new way of approach, by the irrefiftible cords of love. There is no paufe, to deliberate whether it is beft to receive or reject fuch a God. There is no longer a deliberation between going and flaying. The voice of the heart is, let me go if I may. The torments of eternity, prepared for rejecting finners, are at fuch a moment forgotten, and are not the motive for choosing God. A fense of guilt and unworthinefs is the only impediment, and though this be great, it does not prevail .- Drawn by divine glory the humble penitent approaches, thinking, perhaps he may be accepted; and if punishing justice should meet and repel him, still, if he may continue to behold this GOD and Redeemer, it will be a fupport under any poffible pain. Thus the foul is united to GOD through JESUS CHRIST.

THIS firm and delightful approbation of the Mediator, his character, the whole plan of grace, and the most humbling doctrines of the gospel, is one principal evidence of a changed heart.

It is to holinefs finful men are oppofed. It is holinefs, which GoD means to difplay and promote by the gofpel. Sinners will be pleafed with the doctrines of divine grace, fo long as they can understand them, in accommodation to their own evil difposition.—Approving gofpel doctrines is no evidence of a good heart, unlefs these doctrines are understood, as a dispensation, from first to last, promoting holinefs of heart and life. It is the holinefs of the gospel which a good man loves. PATIENCE, humility, meeknefs of fpirit, felfdenial for the glory of GOD, perfeverance in good works fincerely practifed, and an obfervance of pofitive religious inflitutions, fo far as they are known to be fuch, are alfo contained in the evidence of being born of GOD.

FROM what hath been faid on this fubject we may infer, the unhappy flate of fundry defcriptions of perfons, which in collection amount to a very great number.

1ft. OF those who have never been brought to feel their unholy and guilty hearts. The human mind may go on long in a doctrinal belief of our original depravity, and still be wholly without just apprehensions of its own fin ; never be flain by the law; never difcover the true nature, and reigning power, of that finful tafte which fills the heart; never difcover a real opposition to the character of Gop and the nature of holinefs; never be brought feelingly to cry, on any principles whatever, help Lord or I perish. Education first fixed a doctrinal belief, and life hath gone on in affenting to the truth, without any feeling of the evil within. The fecurity of life prevents examination. Such perfons, from motives of this world, may be regular in their manners and in a vifible attendance on many religious inftitutions. They are friends to every thing in religion but the experimental and evangelical part of it in the heart .- Having never feen their own unholy, guilty want of a supreme love of GoD, they depend for eternal fafety, on their visible regularity and the general mercy of God through a Saviour. There is no evidence that fuch perfons have been born of the Spirit, or that dying in their present state, they can escape the wrath to come.

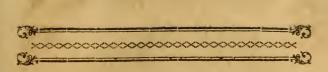

2d. This fubject flows the error of all who deny a change of heart to be neceffary for falvation.

THESE perfons cut themfelves off from eternal life.—They deny the appropriate office-work of the Holy Spirit, in the falvation of men; which, is refifting him in a high manner. However firmly they may think the death of CHRIST to be neceffary, they prevent their own benefit from it by rejecting the application; for they will never reason themselves into that true holinefs, which is neceffary for feeing God. Indeed, it is an opposition to holines, which is their temptation to deny the need of a change; and the denial proves that finners do not defire fuch a heaven as CHRIST died to purchase. If they did truly choofe it, the need and offer of renovating aid, would instantly appear to be a defirable truth. Let all, who deny, think well on this point. Let them examine, and compare their own hearts with the nature of gofpel holinefs. If this be ferioufly done, they must be convinced, there is an opposition in the heart which divine power only can remove.

3dly. THOSE, who think that an alteration of the external circumftances under which the mind acts, will caufe a fufficient change of heart for eternal life, are in a dangerous error. They never will find a change of external circumftances and fituation, fufficient to change the moral principles or relifh of the mind. Men are not finners, becaufe the circumftances of their exiftence, in this world, are a rational inducement to fin; for it is always contrary. Being in the body, and furrounded with fuch objects and events, as are commonly called temptations, is not the caufe of a finful heart. Thefe, may be means of driving a heart, which was before finful, into more visible exercife; yet are not the caufe of fin. Sin hath a deeper origin than the external circumstances. under which the mind acts, and is in the heart itself. It is an original and governing wrong temper, which change of circumstances may variously discover, but never eradicate. Therefore, death and a removal from the tempting objects of the world, will have no tendency to fit us for heaven. The foul, when ftripped of its body and removed from this world, will still retain the moral character or relish with which it departed; nor will the objects of another world have a power to change the temper. If the departing foul diflikes GOD and holinefs, a clearer fight of him, will produce the most enraged enmity. The circumstances of this worldly existence are, therefore, fo far from being the caufe; that it is probable they are principal means, of preventing the excess of fin and torment, which revelation teaches us will overtake the departed impenitent. With what alarm ought all unrenewed minds to think of going into another world! They will meet a difpleafed GoD, who out of CHRIST is a confuming fire to finners; and go to a place, where there are no objects of enjoyment fuited to the relish of their minds. They will be felfifh and proud without opportunity of gratifying the paffion, which through difappointment must increase to all the rage of enmity. An utter despair, either of deliverance or change, will make the mifery dreadful. These folemn confiderations, flow the importance of teaching the doctrine of JESUS CHRIST, Verily, verily, I fay unto thee, except a man be born of water, and of the fpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven. AMEN.

SERMON XI.

Receiving CHRIST by faith.

JOHN i. II.

But as many as received him, to them gave he powet to become the fons of GoD, even to them that believe on his name.

TO become the fons of GOD in the gofpel meaning, is to poffefs and be entitled to all that a wife mind can defire. Among all the defcriptions, which GOD ufes to express the near relation between him and his people; that, of his being their father, and they his fons, is most expressive of an endearing union, and the great benefits which they derive from it. Between a father and his fon there is a mutual love, and the father's honor is the happines of the child. The fon is the heir. The apostle faith, of shildren then heirs, heirs of GOD, and joint heirs with CHRIST.

THO' the fovereignty and property of all things, can in no fenfe depart from GOD, and the christian will forever feel a state of most perfect dependance, rejoicing that he is thus, and that God is all in all; ftill he is gracioufly admitted to be heir of all things, even the whole fulnefs of God, in the higheft fenfe that the nature of things permits. He hath the promife of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. All things here, even afflictions, fhall turn more to his good, than he could poffibly order, if the government of the world, were in the most abfolute fenfe, under his own direction. The fulnefs of God and of his works, is the good man's portion.—Being qualified by holinefs of heart, he will perfectly enjoy the eternal difplays of Godhead, and feel the greateft delight, which his finite capacity admits, in beholding every divine perfection, and the opening fcheme of infinite love.

THIS, is being an heir of GOD in the highest, the most glorious and defirable fense we can conceive; and this, is the portion of the fons of GOD. To the unholy and unbelieving, we know this must be a defcription which founds great, still without any meaning which they apprehend. Placed under the light of the gospel, they have often heard it; and perhaps, have fometimes fearched the fcriptures to find more perfectly what this portion is. They will remain in ignorance of it, until their hearts are made right towards GoD; fo that they may fee the moral glory of the divine character and government. Those who have become the fons of GOD by receiving JESUS CHRIST, having tafted this happinefs, know it to be real, most excellent in its nature, and most full and durable; because it arifes from knowing an infinite and eternal God. From the foretafte, they feel affured that the perfection is fulnels of blifs, and heaven a most glorious state. A right to this is derived through God's gracious promife, by receiving CHRIST.—To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the fons of God.

By a power to become the fons of GoD, is meant a title to all the privileges of a juftified ftate, the pardon of fin, freedom from the penalty of the law, and a right through the promife of fovereign grace, to an eternal life of holinefs and peace, in the enjoyment of GoD himfelf.

RECEIVING CHRIST, means a faving faith, which, in the text, is alfo called believing on his name. The fcriptures reprefent our juftification to be granted through faith in CHRIST, on which account, this holy exercife of the heart, is eminently diftinguished by the facred writers, as an important one, in the manner of our falvation by free grace; and with those who fincerely examine their own state, it becomes a frequent inquiry whether they have a true faith.

THOUGH it becomes us to encourage fuch inquiry, it ought alfo to be underftood, that faith is not in its nature more excellent than other chriftian graces; nor is a knowledge of our own faith any better evidence of final falvation, than the fame knowledge of other holy exercifes; for where there is faith, there is love, repentance, and fubmission. One of these graces certainly implies the other; and fuppofing the existence of one, and abfolute non-existence of another, implies an impossible and contradictory character. The work of GOD, which is efficacious to falvation, is begun by his own power giving a new heart; and holy exercifes will fucceed. So far as the fountain is made fweet, all the ftreams will be purified. In describing a christian character, the word of God-joins faith with love, repentance and a holy practice. Whatever our faith may be, if we have not alfo a fenfible love of GoD, and mourning for fin, there is great reafon to fulpect the holy fincerity of our hearts. This will appear by a further defcription of the nature of faving faith.

Ift. FAITH is an exercise of a renewed heart.

In the facred defcription, it is joined with other graces and fruits of the fpirit. The text defcribes faith and its benefits; and the fucceeding verfe tells us, it is found in those, who are born not of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Whatever kind of faith an unrenewed perfon may poffefs, it hath no holinefs and cannot plead the promife of free grace, forgiveness and eternal life. Until the foul is born of God, there can be no union of the will and affections to the Redeemer. If unrenewed perfons attempt to go to CHRIST, and to receive him, there is no union of their hearts to him and his kingdom; and in the want of this, confifts the infincerity of the attempt. Therefore there can be no faving faith, without a change, not of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of GoD; which will also appear by a further defcription what faith is.

2d. FAITH is receiving CHRIST.

THIS is the defcription in the text, where it is alfo called, believing on his name. This receiving muft mean a faving faith, becaufe it gives a power to become the fons of Gon. The words faith and belief, are fometimes ufed, for a perception of the underftanding, or credit yielded to certain facts or truths, fupported by hiftorical and natural evidence. In this fenfe, they do not imply a holy ftate of the foul. Sinful minds may credit gofpel truth, and ftill be oppofed to it. The devils believe and tremble; they believe and hate the truth, which they cannot deny. Thus finful men may give credit to the holy scriptures, and to the gofpel of falvation by CHRIST; and at the fame time, have hearts opposed to the terms of falvation, and to the holy character and doctrines of the Redeemer. This faith or belief cannot be faving, and is not that receiving of CHRIST to which a promise is given. Religion, is receiving truth in the love of it. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness. Evangelical faith is one which works by love. It purifies the heart, and must therefore imply a conformity to CHRIST's character; a choice of him as a Saviour, and of fuch falvation as he offers; and a preference, in every particular, to the manner of deliverance, which is propofed in the gofpel. This receiving of CHRIST forms a voluntary union with him and his kingdom.

FAITH, may properly be called, the first act of the foul, which covenants with GoD and CHRIST. Salvation is offered by GOD, in a covenant way through his Son. Faith, is that choice of the will, which receives the gofpel, in contemplation of its author, his mediatorial offices, his perfonal glories and fufficiency; and which receives GoD, glorioufly reconciled through him. In an unrenewed state, men may fee their danger, and wifh an efcape from it; they may think of the gospel as a favorable inftitution, and tremble at the thought of loofing it; but they tremble only becaufe perfonal danger follows. They remain unbelieving, through a difrelish of the holinefs there is in CHRIST and the fcheme of grace. The felfish may tremble. They often do this, and think they are willing to have CHRIST and try to exercife faith ; but he cannot be found by them, in his faving offices, until they love him for what he is, choose him for his precioul.

nels, and choose his gospel for its fitnels to honor God.

In a faving faith, the foul receives him with love, embraces and becomes a joyful party to the offered covenant, and feels a moral union of affection, truft and dependence on him. Faith includes a fenfe of his fufficiency and the wonderful fitnefs of the gospel to exalt GoD, and fave guilty finners. An unholy finner, in previous meditation on becoming a christian indeed, thinks he shall rejoice greatly in an apprehension of the fafety he has obtained. It is true, that when he finds and fiducially receives CHRIST, he will rejoice greatly; but with quite another kind and ground of joy, from what he fuppofed. It will be the joy of beholding the glory of God in the face of JESUS CHRIST, and the happinels of committing himfelf to an all-fufficient Saviour, who is infinitely worthy in his own nature, and able to glorify GOD in redeeming men. The believer, by faith gives himfelf up to JESUS CHRIST, trufts in him for all he needs, and defires to be accepted, only in fuch a way, as fovereign wifdom fees to be beft. Thus the covenant of grace, ordered fure in all things by infinite wifdom, is compleated between GOD and the believer. God has accepted him in fovereign mercy, and will be faithful to fulfil all his promifes of grace. The believer, is united in holy affection to CHRIST and his kingdom, and will be preferved in perfeverance unto eternal life, by the power of GoD.

THE first exercise of a faving faith, is not always known to be fuch, by those who have it. It is most common, for a peaceful hope to be gradually formed in the mind, by mature reflection on its own exercises, and a growing acquaint.

ance with the life of evangelical holinefs. All the doctrinal knowledge, which can be attained by an unfanctified perfon, will not give him a true apprehension of gracious feelings. The apprehenfions of speculation, will forever be different from those of experience; nor can spiritual blindnefs be removed by rational inquiry, or by any means of informing the mind. The finner, in previous fpeculation, may fuppofe the change to be great and wonderful, and it is great beyond his expectation; but the greatness and wonder is of a kind he had not conceived. The feelings of the heart are fweet and placid-joy unfpeakable and full of glory—a joy in Gon—a fight of glory, folemnizing but fweet, full of majefty but divested of pomp and glare. It is the glory of infinite love, and the fight of it is transforming, Changing the foul into the fame image, from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord.

3dly. A FAITH which is faving gives new evidence of the reality of things invifible; of divine glory; of the divine government, its excellence and ftability; of all gospel truth and the rewards of another world.

AN unholy mind never can have that ftrong and fure belief of thefe things, which is felt by the people of GOD. Therefore, a faving faith is fometimes defcribed by a firm perfuafion and knowledge of the truth, of the invifible things of GOD, and the realities of the world to come.

MOSES by faith endured as feeing him who is inwifible. His perfuation of GOD's being, perfections and government was altogether greater, than the most learned unbeliever can possifies. The fame also happened in the list of eminent faints recorded in Heb. xi. They had a perfuasion Z and knowledge of GoD's being and government, which is never attained by unholy perfons. Through this perfuasion, they could act and fuffer in the caufe of GoD, beyond other men. It is for this reason, that the apostle, in the beginning of the chapter, defines faith, to be the evidence of things not feen. An evidence different from the most learned speculation.

THE fame apostle faith, If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost.—In whom the GOD of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, less the light of the glorious gospel of CHRIST, who is the image of GOD, should shine unto them.

THE hiding of the gospel here spoken of, is common to all the lost; whether they be heathen, or christians only by doctrinal knowledge. It is the want of that perfuasion and knowledge of the truth, which is peculiar to a faving faith.

WHOEVER believeth that JESUS is the CHRIST, is born of GOD.—This means a believing to falvation, and contains that certainty of unfeen things, which is peculiar to the people of GOD, and is the evidence of things not feen. The unbeliever, even when his reafon and conficience are entirely convinced, fo that his mouth is flut before GOD, hath not that kind of certainty concerning the invifible things of GOD and another world, which is felt by the believing difciple.

THERE is one branch of evidence for the truth, which an unholy mind never can receive; and to thofe who have received it, this is the higheft of all evidence. It is a fight or feeling of the glory of truth—its fitnefs—its perfect excellence —its fuitablenefs to the glory of GoD and the beft interefts of being, whereby, the great whole is the most bleffed it can be. There must be a good heart to fee this glory. WHEN the facred writings mention believing that JESUS is the CHRIST, as evidence of final falvation, they always mean believing the truth on chriftian evidence; and chriftian evidence, is a fight of the moral glory of truth. A faving faith is believing with the beart. Faith of the underftanding flows from rational evidence; faith or believing of the heart from a fight of moral excellence in the object or truth believed. Faith of the underftanding, is common to wicked angels and to men both good and bad; faith of the heart is peculiar to the faints of GoD, and flows from that evidence, which is diftinguishingly chriftian, a fight of moral glory.

TAKE an unbelieving finner, in whom confcience is alive, and fet before him the doctrinal evidence of GoD's character, and of CHRIST's divinity and mediation.-Defcribe to him the divine miracles, the fulfilment of prophecy, the providence of GoD, owning and preferving his own caufe, together, with all external evidence of the christian scheme .- In this cafe he is rationally convinced, his confcience testifies to the truth, and he is a speculative christian.-His conviction and belief are of that kind, which makes his guilt compleat, and exposes him to eternal punishment; but with all this, he hath not attained that peculiar evidence, by which the true believer knows that JESUS is the CHRIST. He hath not feen the moral glory of CHRIST, the glory of the Father in the face of CHRIST, the glory of the gofpel scheme, nor the true glory of that heavenly state revealed in the christian scriptures.

A SIGHT of moral glory, is the high and allconquering evidence, which gives to the mind a fenfe of reality, and raifes it above all doubting. This fight of glory, is the compleating evidence of things not feen, and gives a kind of certainty 188 Receiving CHRIST by faith. Serm. XI.

fimilar, in many refpects, to the certainty that is felt in the vision of heaven.

LET there be all poffible rational evidence, without this, the mind turns on itfelf, and afks the perplexing question, Where is the real ex-cellence of this scheme? It appears to be compleat, its parts are well adjusted and meet each other, there is no want of testimony, for nature, providence, miracles and prophecy confpire to. confirm it.-Confcience affents, and there is a fenfe of guilt in refifting, and a fear of coming before the GOD who hath published it. Still where is the excellence, and lovelinefs of the fcheme? If I could fee this I should not doubt. The unholy in heart never can fee this glory. The fight is confined to those who are born of the fpirit, and it is the peculiar evidence which experimental christians have, making them fure and certain that JESUS is the CHRIST of GOD, and his words eternal truth. Therefore, it is faid that faith is the evidence of things not feen; that he who believeth JESUS to be the CHRIST, that is, believeth on the true christian evidence, is born of God. A faving faith is, in the holy fcriptures, often defcribed by this certainty of the invisible things of GOD and eternity.

To thofe who have faith, it is a piece of fpiritual armour, whereby they are enabled to refift the doubts fuggefted by Satan. It is hard to make the believer, who is a chriftian indeed, call in queftion the oracles of his Gop.—His faith is a fhield, whereby he refifts the fiery darts of Satan, of wicked men, and an alluring world. Let his powers of intellect and reafon be weak, and his doctrinal knowledge fmall; ftill, he refifts all the arguments of evil men and ftands unfhaken in the midft of a wicked and adulterous generation, and hath courage, though alone, to be on the fide of Gon. To fuch a believer, his faith is the evidence of things not feen ; God is prefent with him; the gospel is the power of GoD to falvation .- An approaching judgment and eternity with its rewards, are as much substantiated to him, as the daily events of fenfe with which he is furrounded; therefore, this faith is alfo called the fubstance of things hoped for.

4th. FROM the defcription that has been given, it doth not appear, that the first act of faving faith, is precifely the fame in all christians.

THO' it be of the fame holy nature, and implies all other holy exercifes, it is not in all cafes, precifely the fame truth, which the heart first receives in believing. Men are under a neceffity, by a limitation of their understanding, to view a scheme of truth by its parts. These parts are all congenial in their nature. The temper which honeftly receives one, will receive all; on their being prefented, in fucceffion, before the understanding. The gospel scheme contains many fuch truths, which are fo connected, that one of them implies the others; ftill, they must be viewed in fucceffion, by the finite minds of men. Such is, the glory of GOD and of all his perfections, in the manner of redeeming finners through CHRIST; the fufficiency of the Redeemer to fave to the uttermost, those who come to Gop in this way; the fulness of the gospel falvation to relieve all the miferies of finners, who are by nature unholy, guilty, and justly condemned; the excellency of that kingdom which is formed by the mediation and atonement.-Thefe, with feveral other truths, are effential parts of the gospel scheme. Doubtless an infinite understanding may view them fimply as the fame truth; but a finite mind, must view the parts in fuccession, and which ever of them the heart first receives, it is faving faith. Every christian in the progress of a life of faith, will fee, receive and rejoice in all these truths; but they may not be presented, in the fame order of fuccession, to all holy minds. Therefore, the first act of faving faith, may not be precisely the fame, in all who are brought to falvation through JESUS CHRIST.

THIS, in part, accounts for the various descriptions, of this most effential grace, which are found in the scriptures of truth.

THE gofpel fcheme is prefented to the underftanding of men, in the form of a covenant between GOD and the foul. This covenant embraces many evangelical truths, and receiving any one of them with love, is a faving faith. It is meeting the terms of the covenant, and proves that holy ftate of the heart, which will rejoice in GoD's character, and the whole fcheme of his government.

FROM the nature of a faving faith, the following things appear.

1st. THAT believers are united to GOD thro' JESUS CHRIST, in the most glorious and bleffed manner.

IT is a union of moral character, of will, of affection, and of eternal bleffednefs. This was the object of JESUS CHRIST in laying down his life, therefore, he prayed to the Father, Sanctify them through thy truth. That they all may be one; as theu, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they alfo may be one in us. This onenefs of moral character and affection, makes the faints of GoD the most glorious and bleffed they can be. A conformity to the infinite holinefs of GoD, is the greatest perfonal glory they can receive. The manner of their union, through the mediation of the Son of GoD, is in the highest degree glorious for a creature, and fo wonderful that we may cry out, O the depth of the riches both of the wifdom and knowledge of God. How broad the base for bleffednefs to the redeemed ? They ftand by the mighty power of GOD, are one with CHRIST, and joint heirs of the fulnels of the Lord. They may fuffer affliction for the fhort feafon of this life; but when posseffed of their Lord's temper, can glory in tribulation. Even when they kneel to pray for deliverance from the trials of the world, they can check the defire by fubmiffion; faying, it was one reafon of our existence in this ftate, that we might glorify GOD by patience; therefore, Father, do thine own will. Whatever promotes the glory and bleffednefs of GoD's kingdom, will be their peace. GOD will always reign, and his will be their choice; fo that nothing can happen contrary to their good. The government of the univerfe, through eternity, will be as they wifh, verifying the facred word, All things are yours, and ye are CHRIST's, and CHRIST is GoD's. Herein, is the manifold wifdom of GOD, that he can give all things to his redeemed, in fuch a manner, as will forever difplay his own abfolute fovereignty. By renouncing felf and choosing GOD and his kingdom, for their portion, they gain all things; and all things work together to promote the profperity of that caufe, which is their fupreme delight. United to GOD in moral affection, they will enjoy him in all his fulness forever and ever. United in love to all holy intelligencies, the growing bleffednefs of the eternal state, will perpetually augment their de-light. These are the fruits of a faving union with God, by faith in JESUS CHRIST.

2dly. HAVING contemplated the nature of faith, it becomes us to inquire, whether we have thus received CHRIST?

It is only thofe, who have thus received him, that obtain power to become the fons of Gon. All others are, in his fight, enemies to his kingdom; and though life is fet before them by the gofpel, the offer will eventually prove, a favor of death unto death. There is much room to be deluded concerning our own faith; and perhaps multitudes are in this flate.—There is the faith of education, the faith of rational conviction, the faith of felf-love, the faith of fear, for the devils through one kind of faith tremble before Gon; and all thefe, not working by love, have an effential defect.

THERE is, in christian lands, a general affent to the gofpel, arifing from education or fome other caufes, on which men are prone to rely, thinking it is a faith which will fave them. They believe in CHRIST doctrinally, becaufe he was the Saviour of their fathers ; or becaufe they have heard it faid, God is merciful in this way. They have never felt the exceeding finfulnefs of their own hearts, and the need of a purifying faith. On this general belief, joined with fuch visible morality as may flow from felfish motives and a civilized flate of fociety, they think themfelves good chriftians. Such perfons, may occafionally become zealous and contend for the faith, in which they fuppofe themfelves to fland, while wholly destitute of evangelical holines. It is a faith which may be reconciled to living without GOD in the world, and requires little denial of human pride. A true faith always works by love; it beholds the moral glory of GoD in the face of JESUS CHRIST; it makes CHRIST very precious to the heart ; it purifies the foul from all fin; it forms a union of the will and affections to the divine character, counfels and government ; it makes the invisible things of God and eternity both real and influential on the mind; it shows the vanity of felf and all the creatures; and produces a most holy walk with God in obedience to all his commandments. By perusing the life of those faints recorded in fcripture, who were eminent in faith; we may learn the nature of this grace, which is uniform in all who have it. By faith they endured affliction joyfully; were diligent in duty; could deny themfelves and fuffer for the caufe of CHRIST; fet little by the riches and honors of the world, feeking the city of God, a habitation not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. What zeal for God's kingdom, and weanednefs from the world! What lives of prayer and devotion ! What a love of fouls, and holy afpirations to be with CHRIST, were manifest in those faints, who are recorded to animate our zeal, and instruct us in the nature of christian grace. The faith of every true christian is of the fame nature, and wrought by the fame spirit. It is a view of heaven and heavenly things, and a union of heart to them, which irrefiftibly draws the believer to the glorious object of contemplation. Unlefs, we can find fomething of this nature in our own fupposed faith, we are still without CHRIST in the world and aliens from the communion of faints.

3dly. OUR meditation, on receiving CHRIST by faith, leads us to fee the nature and guilt of unbelief.

THE difbelief of heathen, finds an excufe, in having never heard of CHRIST and his doctrines; but the unbelief of inftructed people is withou; excufe. That unbelief, which lives in a neglect of CHRIST, is the fountain of all fin; and it is the very unholinefs which fubjects finners, under gofpel light, to eternal mifery.

194 Receiving CHRIST by faith. Serm. XI.

It is a mark of very dangerous fecurity, not to feel the guilt of unbelief. The want of faith in CHRIST is the highest evidence of a wicked and rebellious heart. Particular fins are but streams. of which unbelief is the fountain. GOD comes to finful men in the gospel of his Son, displaying himfelf in all his holinefs and grace, in his fcheme of counfel and government, calling on them to be partakers of his holinefs and the bleffednefs of his kingdom. Unbelief is that fate of the heart, which rejects the whole, and refufes the union of holinefs and love. CHRIST fays, be that receiveth me, receiveth him that fent me ; fo that a neglect of JESUS CHRIST must be a rejection of GOD. The only reafon, finners do not feel the guilt of unbelief, is an ignorance of their own temper; and if they ever come to themselves, fo as to return. to their Father, they will know this hardness of their hearts, to be worthy of GoD's everlasting displeasure. That state of the heart must be a very criminal one, which fees no beauty, no precioufnels in the character of CHRIST; no glory in a holy God and his method of grace; no lovelinefs in the law and gofpel; and no obligation on men to feek the glory of God in all they do. This is the state of all those perfons, who do not live by faith in JESUS CHRIST the Son of GOD. They mean to be fecure and at eafe concerning religion and another world. They excufingly fay, we injure no man, neither do we difhonor God by any open fin. But confider, O finner, who art at eafe in Zion, whether this be true. Is not unbelief a difhonor to GoD? Is it not difhonoring God, to live in fuch a manner, as fhows

a neglect of his Son, of his gospel, of his infinite wifdom and goodness in redemption? Does not a thoughtlefs life, both denyand difapproveall the counfels of his word and providence? An unbelieving heart, is a rejection of the divine government in the work of redemption, which is to the Lord the most precious of all his works. Whoever intends to abstain from aggravated immorality, and in fome future time, become more thorough in religion, thinking he shall grow no worfe in the fight of GOD, is under a great delufion. He is becoming worfe, and treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, by neglecting the glorious Redeemer, who is worthy of eternal love and praife. Thus, a fecure life is a great increase of guilt; and the fecurity, which is thought to be fo harmlefs, becaufe free perhaps from vifible crimes, is adding to the weight of guilt and fhutting the thoughtlefs foul out of heaven. May all, who are now fecure, think of this, and awake from the fleep of death, before they are fixed in a state, where the offers of affistance are heard no more. AMEN.

SERMON XII.

The life of faith.

HEBREWS X. 38.

Now the just shall live by faith-.

HIS epistle was written, at a time, when chriftians were exposed to great perfecution. The ruling powers of the world, were bitter enemies to the doctrines of CHRIST, and the purity of christian practice. This accounts for many things, in the facred epiftles, defigned to fupport believers under outward trials and the lofs of worldly good. The apoftles endeavoured to animate them, by the confideration that they were fuffering for God's caufe. Alfo, by the promise of a peaceful enjoyment and communion with their Lord, in the world to which all are going; and by the example of eminent faints, who, before their time, had been called to fuffer for God. These, through the efficacy of faith, had acted boldly, fuffered patiently, and given evidence of a strength derived from heaven. The life of faith, in holy diligence and patience, when exemplified by the conduct of GoD's people, is a high evidence of the reality of religion, and that GoD affifts those who trust in him.

The life of faith.

A CHRISTIAN life, efpecially if it be attended with worldly difficulties, carries conviction to the confcience of unbelievers. They are convinced of a principle in the heart, which they never felt; and that, in their own cafe, there is a want of fomething, which it would be defirable to have.

A REVIEW of the faith in ancient christians, and the effects it wrought in them, is also animating to us their weaker brethren. It fhows the divinity, and fufficiency of our religion; and that the weaknefs of our own faith, is the only caufe we ever fhrink back from duty, and defpair of the divine care. In the verses before our text, the apostle exhorts christians, to patience and fortitude, under the trials they were called to en-dure. He tells them The just fhall live by faith. Faith gives the christian his strength, his diligence, his boldness in the cause of GoD, his patience and firmness under bitter trials, his inflowing of support from CHRIST, his confciousness of a God prefent and cloathed with all perfection, his certainty of a fpeedy triumph, and an end of his conflict by being received to the prefence of CHRIST. Confidering these things, as effects which flow from the very nature of faith ; and alfo confidering, the darkness, fin and trials of the world in which we live, it may fitly be faid The just shall live by faith.

ALTHO' the pardon of fin and our acceptance by GOD, is gracioully promifed to the first exercife of faith; it never becomes unneceffary for the christian. It is as useful in his succeeding life, as it was necessary for his first acceptance. The very fame faith, which is required for justification; preferves the union with GOD through CHRIST, and receives and exerts the ftrength derived from him. Faith, being continued by the quickening of the Holy Spirit, and exerciled in daily trust and obedience, is the life of faith, which we are now to confider. By it the ancients obtained a good report; and by it we are to ferve GoD in our generation, until he shall take us to himfelf.

THROUGH the xi. chapter, the power and effects of faith, in a number of glorious examples, are defcribed. In other places, especially in his epiftle to the Romans, the apoftle Paul defcribed faith as justifying and uniting the foul to GOD; in. this place, he defcribes it as a perfevering principle of holy life. This principle was made apparent, by the exercife of fpiritual ftrength, derived from GoD, in fuffering for him and acting boldly in his cause. They were enabled to bear and do things impossible to depraved humanity, without fuch afliftance. In the inftances recorded, the faints were enabled to truft in the divine word against all natural appearances; to despife the honors and pleafures of the world, when brought in competition with their duty; expose themfelves to the greatest danger in honoring God and doing good; and endure the most exquisite tortures under the faw and at the stake.

IN a former difcourfe, we have confidered faith, as evidence of things not feen, by difcovering to the mind the glory of GoD and his fcheme of government. It is in this way, that it gives ftrength both to do and to fuffer. When a chriftian fees GoD prefent with him; when eternity is made real to him; when the connection between time and eternity is opened before him; when a divine action in all things is realized and felt; when there is a confcioufnefs of union with Almighty love and wifdom, the weak creature tan do all things, through CHRIST who strengtheneth him. The Lord gives strength to his people, by bringing himself in his glory, his agency and government into their view; and enabling them to feel their own union to the source of holy action.

THE following particulars will illustrate the power of faith, in the christians life.

1st. By faith he derives constant spiritual life and strength from JESUS CHRIST.

THERE must be a daily receiving, and continued communion with the Saviour to preferve the christian temper, practice and joy. The first coming to CHRIST, begins an intercourfe between him and the foul, which will be eternal. He meets the believer, when coming by faith to receive; and from his own fulnefs, bestows all spiritual graces, with a fense of his own glory, and the joy unspeakable which follows.

As GOD grants his bleffing only through CHRIST, and it is faith alone which receives him; it muft of courfe be by faith, that fpiritual mercies are received. If the chriftian backflides and ceafes to go and receive; there is an immediate interruption of holy exercife; the fight of GOD's glory is departed; the fenfe of his gracious prefence is loft; and the heart, being left alone, is weak, comfortlefs, and wretched by the temptations of the world. All this happens from an interruption of faith, which receives fpiritual life and ftrength from GOD. When the channel of receiving is ftopped, the fanctifying, enlightening and comforting power of GOD ceafes to flow into the foul.

CHRIST plainly told this truth to his difciples. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine : No more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit : for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is caft forth as a branch, and is withered : and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. This paffage, forcibly defcribes, the daily use of faith. The life of a christian is derived. It flows forth from his Saviour GoD, and his faith receives the gracious affiftance. His faith is that feeking which finds; that knocking to which entrance is given.

EXPERIENCE witneffes the truth of this defcription, for while a believer feels his dependance, and goes to GOD for life and ftrength; while he is willing that GOD fhould have the glory of giving, he feels grace by a divine energy flow into his foul. He can fay, God is my helper and my strength. Unworthy as I am, I feel a divine breathing into this polluted temple, and my foul afcends in adoration and praife. Perhaps, faith never applies in this way, without fome fenfible return, of communicated grace from the Redeemer, who is the way and the life of his people.

By this communion from above, a general functification is promoted ; all holy exercises increafe in strength; and the conversation is in heaven.

2dly. By faith, the christian has an habitual apprehension of a present God, and is familiarifed in his meditations, to the things of the world to come. It has already been defcribed, how his faith becomes evidence of things not feen, by difcovering the glory of moral objects, which may be called the peculiar and irrefiftible chriftian evidence. This evidence, prefented to the mind, produces an habitual apprehenfion of a prefent TEHOVAH. As GOD appears to come near, eternity with every thing great and glorious, which is revealed concerning it, approaches with him. As the natural fun arifing, fpreads glory over the face of creation; fo, the rifing of the fun of righteoufnefs, in an apprehension of his near prefence, difcovers the reality of the moral fyftem; that thefe moments of time, are furrounded with an eternity past and future; and the glory of omnipotence, becomes a reflected light from all his works of creation, providence and redemption. The foul feels the patriarchal description, "How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the houfe of God, and this is the gate of heaven. GOD, and the things of GOD, become exceeding real.

IT was from this fight of God by faith, that David faid, " Thou knoweft my down-fitting, and mine up-rifing, thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou compassed my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. There is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knoweft it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.-If I afcend into heaven, thou art there : if I make my bcd in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there (hall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I fay, furely the darkness shall cover me : even the night shall be light about me." He concludes the defcription by expressing his happines in this fense of the divine prefence. " How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O GoD! How great is the fum of them ! If I should count them, they are more in number than the fand : when I wake, I am still with thee."

THIS fenfe of the divine prefence, and the reality and glory of the invifible world always accompanies the life of faith. It is one principal thing which diftinguifhes the children of GoD from other people, and is generally proportioned to their degree of faith. When it is in low exercife, invifible things do but glimmer on them; fenfe prevails; temptations attack, and too often overcome; their armour is gone, and for a feafon they are led captive by the powers of fin. When faith is in high exercife, and open to receive from the divine fountain; all in the foul, is life and ftrength from GoD, and all around it is glory.

THE immediate effects, in the believer, of GoD's being made thus prefent to him are very glorious. He hath meat to eat, of which the men of the world are ignorant. The glory of GoD, fhining through every object around him, is his happinefs.—All things, confidered as part of the divine plan, appear to be right.—He is willing the government fhould be the Lord's.— His duty is, alfo, his pleafure.—He feels himfelf to be upheld by Almighty power and goodnefs ; a power near at hand, and not afar off, in which he lives and is moved.

How different, in refpect of peace, are the conditions, of those who live by faith in GoD, and of such as reject him by unbelief. One is made happy, by a fense of the divine approach; the other is filled with dread. One receives strength from GoD; the other with trembling, tries to fly, but sinks in his own weakness. One rifes to meet the opening prospects of eternity, and a more near approach to the throne of GoD; the other retires from them, as the most dreaded of all objects.

3dly. By faith, the christian fees and rejoices in the providence of GoD, which irresistibly directs all events that will ever take place.

THE providence of GOD is a glorious truth. It is a fubject, either full of doubts and gloom to men; or of clearnefs and joy. In each cafe, it is according to the moral state of their hearts. No fubject has excited more doubts, fears, joys, and pains. While fome confider the doctrine, premonitory of their future wretchedness; others, efteem it a truth in which heaven and earth ought to rejoice, and the fure bafis of created bleffednefs. It is not ftrange, that unholy creatures contend with the universal providence of a holy Gon, and try to difbelieve. It is a truth oppofed to their wifnes; which affures the downfall of vice, and its votaries; and an end to the pleafures of fin. These pleafures are permitted for a feafon, that the downfall may be more confpicuous, and the glory of holinefs more compleat. Not only a fear of evil to come; but alfo a difrelish of leading principles in the supreme government, and an ignorance of its beauty, will make bad men opposed to the doctrine of an univerfal providence, by which all events are effi-ciently determined. They can fee no glory in this government, and the mind will try to difbelieve that, in which it fees no glory.

THE wifdom of GOD, in his providence, is an unfathomable deep to angels and men. He does good, in a way fo much above the higheft created intellect, that there will be the mysteries of providence, even to the holy. They are often obliged to follow GOD by faith, in cloudy and dark ways; and if their faith be fmall, it will be with them as with pious ASAPH, their feet being almost gone, and their steps well nigh slipping, thro' the mysteries of the divine government, and the apparent incongruity of GoD's promises and providence.

IF this be the cafe, in those hours when faith is weak; what cavils and doubts may we not expect in the wicked, who both fear and difrelifh the providence of JEHOVAH, and fee no beauty in its operations. Sometimes they will doubt; fometimes they will deny; and at all times feel oppofed. Seeing no glory of GoD around them, they think he is at a diftance, and are tormented between doubting, fearing, and the power of temptation acting on their inbred corruption. This life of unholinefs must be a miferable one; for tho' the creature needs a GOD to uphold and a providence to keep him, he dreads to receive either as truth. If he would be honeft, to obferve his own feelings, he might find in them the embryo existence of that hell, which is threatened in the fure word of revelation.

How bleffed! is that ftate of the heart which delights in the principles of divine government ! How excellent the grace which fees the prefence of God's irrefiftible providential power, and can rejoice in it !-----Here the believer, by his life of faith, is made bleffed, confirmed against doubting, and reconciled to what takes place. From an apprehenfion of the divine prefence, he knows there is wifdom, though he cannot trace it; and that the things, which appear dark to human difcernment, will be most for GoD's glory and the good of his kingdom. He has accustomed himfelf to confider a divine agency, in all that happens, even the falling of a hair from the head; fo that every thing which he fees, hears or feels leads him up to God. Placed in the midst of a scene of life and action, of causes and effects ; the whole appears to him the action of Gon, the great first cause ; who is holy, in the midst of the unholinefs of his creatures ; pure, in permitting from the most glorious motives, that which they do from motives the most base and worthy of punishment. In fight of this providence conftantly acting, and every where existent; binding all the parts of the universe into one most perfect plan, tending to the most perfect end; in fight, by faith, of the glorious and bleffed kingdom, which will be formed by the energy of the power and wildom that now worketh; in fight of the union between things in heaven, and things on earth, in JESUS CHRIST the Lord, by whom all things were created and are named, the holy, believing foul rejoices with joy unspeakable and full of glory. The faith, which can fee this providence in nature and grace, will give a bleffed life on earth and triumphant entrance into eternity.

The life of faith.

Serm. XII.

4thly. By faith, the just are enabled to support an habitual apprehension, of the vanity and unfatisfying nature of all earthly things.

It has been faid, that faith brings GOD and the things of eternity into view of the mind. In fight of thefe, if the heart be right, it may be expected that all prefent things will fink in efteem. Vanity of vanities, is the true defcription which infinite truth and wifdom hath given of the world. By this, it is not meant, that the prefent flate of things is badly adapted to the end defigned by governing wifdom. A world, better adapted to the end of its existence, infinite wifdom could not form; and thus the good man views it, therefore does not repine at what Gop permits, or think he could have ordered better.

Still, compared with what is to follow, the pref. ent appears vain to him, in point of inherent excellency, of duration and of power to fatisfy the mind. Without undervaluing prefent good, or want of gratitude for what is now received, his fight of another state by faith, draws his affections hence to the pleafures in heaven. He fays, with truth, this is not my home; these idols of the world, are not my GoDs; I long for the full vision of what faith hath discovered, and in contemplation of that difcovery, thirst to be with CHRIST which is far better. It is this prospect by faith, which weans the difciples of CHRIST from the world, making them pilgrims and ftrangers in the earth, feeking a habitation, a city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. They have not loft a relifh for happinefs, as the unholy may fuppole; but have a tafte for moral glory and a fociety different from this world.

5thly. By faith the christian can with fortitude bear affliction; especially, if called to meet it in the fervice of CHRIST, and to promote his cause in the world.

AFFLICTIONS are, naturally, as terrifying to chriftians, as to others; and they will either repine or fink under them, if not fupported by a fiducial truft in GOD. Natural evil, of every kind, is in its nature undefirable, and the mind can be reconciled to it, only by feeing moral wifdom in the appointment. It was this which enabled one faint to fay, "Though be flay me I will truft in him;" and another, "Although the fig-tree fhall not bloffom, neither fhall fruit be in the vines; The labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; The flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there be no herd in the stalls; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the GoD of my falwation." Faith beholds GOD in afflictions, and receives them as a Father's wifdom and goodnefs. JESUS fet the example, who prayed, If it be poffible let this cup pafs from me, neverthelefs, not my will but thine be done; and his people, actuated by the fame principles, can follow him.

The life of faith.

Serm. XII.

THERE are fundry confiderations which will enable the afflicted christian to acquiesce, yea, even to glory in tribulation. He feels his own defert, and can kifs the rod, as being defervedly appointed. He fees GoD glorify himfelf, and can joyfully fuffer, that the Lord may be honored. He relies on the promife, that afflictions shall purify him, and with pleasure reads the covenant, " If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments : then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." He confiders the divine government as a perfect fystem, neither defective nor redundant in its parts, and all leading to the most glorious end, in Gon's display of his own nature and the creatures enjoyment of him.

FAITH, places even the afflicted chriftian, in the mount of triumph. The place of affliction is often his Pifgah, and the time of fuffering is the hour of his afcent, from whence he views the heavenly Canaan and his God. Raifed to the mount by faith, with a perfect confidence in God he hears and fees the ftorms of time beat at its foot. Though his body is pained his mind is at eafe; though the world is his enemy, God is his friend; though his earthly prospects are defolated, he finds a fufficient portion in this truth, that the Lord reigns. It is only by the life of faith in God, that this peace can be attained.

IT would furpais my prefent limits, even to hint all the benefits of a life of faith. It is thus that duty is made eafy and pleafant.-Fear of men is removed .- The path of duty, and the performance of it, are as a shining light, shining more and more unto the perfect day.-Jesus is beheld, reigning in his own Zion, and promoting his caufe, both by the obedience of friends and the oppofition of enemies.-The world with its temptations, and the flefh with its lufts are conquered.-God is feen governing the nations, and pointing the wrath of men, who mean not fo, to the completion of his glorious counfels.-The peaceful, humble believer, is guided through a world of turbulence and pride, until he quietly fleeps in the arms of JESUS.

THIS fubject must teach the deficiency and guilt of christians, in the prefent day of deep declension.

THO' GOD doth not leave any of his called to final defertion; they are often left to great backfliding, to lofe their firft love, and live too much conformed to the manners and fpirit of the world. What caufe chriftians have to blufh ! to mourn and weep for themfelves ! and confefs a departure from GoD.—From whence doth this come ?—Is there any defect in the gofpel fcheme through which they have been called ?—Is there not a fulnefs, in the power and grace, which firft raifed them into fpiritual life ?—Is not GoD faithful to his promife, that thofe who feek fhall find ?—Is not the way, in which they firft went to GoD for life and holinefs, ftill open to apply, and to receive frefh communications of fuch grace as will make them faithful, holy, and abounding in the joy of their Lord ?—Certainly the way is open; JESUS ftill reigns; GOD ftill reigns, and hears every prayer that is fiducially offered to his name; there is ftrength enough in GOD, and he never denied granting to the prayer of faith. "Draw nigh to GOD, and he will draw nigh to you," is a promife which will never be infracted. All this lownefs in the duties and comforts of a chriftian's life, arifes from the failure of faith. GOD is out of fight, the fhining of his glory in the foul has ceafed, and there is no application to receive from the fountain of fpiritual life; confequently, lufts break forth afrefh, and the world conquers.

The life of faith.

Serm. XII.

THE ancient cloud of witneffes, who by their patience, zeal and good works, fhowed a connexion with heaven and the power of GOD acting in them, all lived by faith. Thus they were enabled to witnefs in their lives and by their death. They were living evidence for the power of divine grace, and the excellence of holinefs. When faith fails, and love waxes cold, it will not be thus; and the cold, formal lives of christian professors, will be a means of hardening finners in their infidelity. Thus CHRIST is difhonored, his caufe is weakened, christianity is ridiculed, and chriftians themfelves become a flumbling block, over which unbelievers fall into eternal destruction. This state of christians is a wilful fin; for though they have not fpiritual ftrength in themfelves, there is a fountain, where it exifts in infinite abundance, and a promifed way of drawing it from the eternal fource. He that abideth not in me, is caft forth as a branch, and is withered. The moment they leave CHRIST, through whom GOD communicates his grace; the fenfible power of religion in the foul will ceafe, and visible duties, though retained, will be performed in a very formal manner. The fcriptures call this ftate " having the form without the power of Godlinefs," and to all fuch the admonition of CHRIST applies. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot : I would that thou wert cold or hot. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot : I will Spew thee out of my mouth.

MULTITUDES, who think they have experienced the fanctifying grace of GoD, are in this ftate. If they think right, GOD will not leave them to a final falling away; for the fame gracious power which called them from total fin, can reclaim from deep backfliding. But is it the comfort of a real chriftian to think he shall in some future time be awaked from his fleep? It was not thus with CHRIST our great example. His meat and drink was, at the prefent time, to do the Father's will and glorify him. The true chriftian comfort is to be constant in beholding and glorifying God. To hope without prefent evidence is a prefumptuous thing. To hope without a present faith is hoping in the midst of misery. I am fenfible, that unholy perfons do not conceive the true comfort of religion, and this is one principal reason they think christians to be joylefs people; but this is not the only reafon. Many who think themfelves to be chriftians are really unhappy. In a ftate of backfliding they halt between two opinions. They know the world will not fatisfy, and are afraid to mingle unrestrainedly with its pleasures ; and at the same time, are fo lukewarm, fo weak in faith, as cuts them off from the happiness of fensible communion with God.-This is indeed a joylefs state, which is often discovered and improved by the ungodly, as evidence against the excellence of piety. It ought not to be thus. Christians ought to flow they are happy in their Redeemer, and they never can do this without the life of faith. The declension which discourse CHRIST, doth also wound their own fouls.

SUCH backfliders ought not to expect the fupporting prefence of GOD in the hour of death. It has, fometimes, been thought ftrange, that among those who are hoped to be fincere, there are fo many inftances, in which their death bed is deprived of the high comforts of religion. But it must be expected that a life low in faith, will be followed by a death of the fame kind. Infinite wildom, in particular inftances, may vary from his general manner of difpenfing. There may be reasons for a life of eminent faith to be left in darkness at death, and for a great backflider to be filled with triumphant joy; but this is not common. The frequent imparture of high comforts in death, to those who have lived low in faith, would be too great evidence in favor of chriftian deficiency; and take off from natural fear, which the wifdom of God improves in exciting men to diligence ; therefore it may not be expected.

LET the people of GOD endeavour to feel their own defects, their weaknefs, their need of conftant communication from CHRIST who is the way and the life. Let them look immediately to GOD to increase their love and faith, and with hearts emptied of human strength and dependance, look directly to him who gives of his own fulness, knowing that it is GOD who worketh in them both to will and to do. AMEN.

Evangelical Repentance.

EZEKIEL XXXVI. 31.

THEN Shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and Shall loathe yourfelves in your own fight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

T is known that the Jews are a people caft off by God. For their difobedience, and effecially for their rejection of the Meffiah, the awful denunciations in the prophecy of Mofes, have been long in execution. As he foretold, they are fcattered among the nations of the whole world, and have fuffered incredible miferies by the hands of other men.

THO' we hope their period of mifery is drawing to a clofe, the curfe appears to be ftill in force; and it is a wonderful evidence, for the truth of the christian scriptures. God hath told us, in the word of prophecy, there shall be limits to this state of punishment; when the Jews, together with the fulness of the Gentile nations, fhall be united in the peaceable, holy, glorious and everlasting kingdom of CHRIST.

WHEN the conversion of that people happens, they will be as eminent in their zeal for the Redeemer, as they have been for their opposition and bitterness to his cause. Their refloration is also foretold, in such language, as implies they shall be gathered into the same land which was given to Abraham, and which their fathers, for many ages possible field.

THE particular events leading to a recovery of their former country, and its complete accomplifhment; are either untold, or expressed in a prophetic manner difficult to be understood before it is unfolded by the fulfilment. The reftoration of that people, with its accompanying circumstances, will be the completion of a long chain of evidence for the truth of revealed religion. This began in the calling of the patriarch Abraham, and hath been, and will continue to be carried on, in the events happening to his family, and in GoD's dealings with them; until they are brought to the lasting possession of the promifed earthly inheritance. The concluding evidence will be the greatest. It will be attended with events most astonishing to mankind, and most convincing that JEHOVAH is GOD, and his fcriptures the word of truth.

WE are in the begining of an eventful period, in which the fcheme of divine evidence for his own truth, is rapidly difclofing by the natural events that now are, and will very foon happen, conformable to the predictions of his word; among thefe, the conversion and recal of the Jews to their ancient land, will be a principal event.

A PROMISE of this recal, and the temper with which they shall return to God is contained in the chapter, from which the text is taken. By his prophet GoD defcribes their difperfion; the great difhonor they fhould do to his name, by their conduct among the people where they fhould be carried; and then lets them know, that after this, for his name and mercy's fake, he would bring them to repentance and be their GoD. And that as the judgments they fuffered, magnified his juffice, his holinefs and hatred of fin; fo their repentance and return would honor his grace, and teach the children of men, the exceeding riches of his mercy.

HE is very particular in telling them, "Not for your fakes will I do this, O houfe of Ifrael, be it known unto you; but for my own great name's fake." I will do it for my own honor; the honor of my grace; and that men may every where know, I am the Lord of the whole earth, and can direct national events with as much eafe, as I ordain the condition of individuals.

THE honor of his fovereignty, and acting in all things for his glory and mercy's fake, is what GOD every where claims in his word; and in his government he is careful to maintain it. Creation flowed forth from his will, and muft forever be governed according to the fovereign counfel of uncreated wifdom.

It is required, as a condition of mercy to finners, that they be willing to depend on fovereign grace; and when brought to evangelical repentance, they rejoice to have it fo. This may be learned from the defcription of repentance found in the text. The verfe defcribes, what the penitent feelings of Ifrael will be, after they are reclaimed by the gracious power of GoD, and look back, in the exercise of a christian spirit, on their own past conduct.

216 Evangelical repentance. Serm. XIII.

THEN shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings which were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

LET us improve these words for our own infruction in the nature of a gracious repentance; and then collect from the text, some marks of trial, whether we have fincerely repented before GOD.

I. WE inquire the nature of evangelical or faving repentance.

As we are, in our own cafe, exposed to mistake, there being many affections of the mind, which in fome refpects refemble holy exercife; we fhould labour for diftinguishing ideas of that repentance towards GoD, to which final falvation is promifed. We may do much, which appears like the fruit of repentance to those who are observing us, and may be fo efteemed by ourfelves; while it doth not thus appear to GoD, the great and omnifcient judge of hearts. We may think much about our being finners; may take much pains to find what is called finful by the law of GOD; may be afraid of fin; may with great agitation of fpirit mourn that we have tranfgreffed; may be convinced that every violation of the divine law is unreafonable, and on principles of public justice, exposes us to punishment; all this may be, without fuch repentance as is required by JESUS CHRIST.

THE connexion between fin and mifery is fo well known, and has been felt fo long; there is danger, through this affociation of ideas, of thinking we loathe fin, when the abhorrence arifes, entirely from the mifery that is expected to follow.—Through felfifh prejudices, it is many times difficult, in our own cafe, to diffinguish between the legal repentance which hates mifery, and the evangelical which abhors fin. To determine this, we ought often to inquire of our hearts, why is fin fo evil a thing? And why do we feel opposed to it? If the only answer we can obtain of our own hearts is this; that hereby we are perfonally exposed to pain, affliction, and the death of the body; and that GOD, a being of fuch power as we cannot overcome, denounces his anger to purfue us in time and through eternity; it is no evidence of a gracious mourning for fin .- All this may be, with hearts oppofed to the divine character. All this may be, without a fupreme love of GoD, and with fuch a relifh of heart, as would commit fin with greediness, if the penalty were removed.

TRUE repentance has respect to the infinite nature and perfection of GOD, which creates an obligation on all creatures to love and ferve him, and abstain from every thing, by which he is difhonored and his kingdom injured. David, in the hour of penitence, and in contemplation of a fin, which was the highest outrage upon purity and the justice due to men; still confessed to GOD, against thee, thee only have I finned. A fenfe of violated obligation to GOD, and of the difhonor done to his name, fwallowed up all other confiderations of mourning. He was not infenfible of the injury done his fubjects, and the church; but injury done to GoD, pierced him with the deepest forrow. Holy Job thus describes his own repentance. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye feeth thee ; wherefore I abbor myfelf and repent in dust and ashes. In this cafe a fight of GOD, and fense of violated obligation to him, were evidently the cause of holy forrow. Hence it is called, repentance to-D d wards Gon. A mourning for fin, as committed against the perfection, the rights, and glory of the Lord.

An evangelical penitent, rifing above felfish regards, beholds an infinite GoD, glorious in holinefs and worthy of all obedience. He beholds a fcheme of creation and created good, to which all finful principles and practice are opposed .--- A law, just and good, which forbids transgression ; a fupreme government of the whole, conducted in infinite reafon, and aiming at great and eternal good. In view of thefe, his fin appears great beyond defcription. It feems to him more bafe than finite conception can comprehend. As is the deepnefs of mourning for a first born; fuch is the depth of forrow, for his own vilenefs and ingratitude. The affliction of his foul is of fuch a nature, as withdraws his thoughts from an apprehenfion of danger to himfelf, and fixes them on the odioufnefs of fin, and the unfpeakable guilt of oppofing a glorious God. When fin is thus apprehended, there is no difficulty in confessing it to be an infinite evil. The cavils of a contradicting heart are filenced. The difputatious philofophy of men, and all palliating defcriptions are banished. The penitent wishes for words, of a thousand fold more descriptive energy, than human language contains, that he may use them in confeffing his vilenefs before GoD.

ONE great difference, between legal and evangelical repentance, arifes from the motive of forrow. In both, there is a forrow for fin; though the two flates of the heart from which they proceed, are in direct moral oppofition, and one diflikes, in the most effential respects, what the other loves. If it were left, to the choice and power of the two characters, to make a heaven; they would act on oppofing principles, and the heaven of one would be a hell to the other. Place the greatest and most unholy finner on a death bed ; let him know he is going directly before a GOD, who is opposed to him, and will punish fin in a very extreme degree ; let him believe there is a place of torment, and that death will be his entrance into it; and he cannot refrain forrowing that he hath finned. In the moment of agitation, it is not probable he will diftinguish between a hatred of fin, and a hatred of milery; and thus suppose himself a fincere mourner before God. It is on this account, that a deathbed repentance is fo open to be sufpected of infincerity, if there hath been no previous penitence. In most fuch instances, if the prospect of immediate danger ceases, the mourning for fin and the imagined diflike of it are felt no more. The refcued finner returns to his vice with new eagernefs. In fuch cafes, we have no reafon to suppose there is repentance towards God. Pain and loss are the thing lamented; and if there could be a way to avoid thefe, the mourning foul would mourn no longer.

It is not thus with the gracious penitent. His heart is right—fin is contrary to his tafte—the thing itfelf is unpalatable. There is no need of danger and pain to make him fee its unreafonable nature. He laments the difhonor done to a glorious GoD, and condemns the caufe of it, and can condemn himfelf, as readily, as he would another.

THE difference of motive, in these two states of the heart, is easily conceived by all true penitents; but such is the blindness of impenitence, that there are some cases of great obduracy, in which it is hard to communicate, even a doctrinal description of the subject.

Evangelical repentance. Serm. XIII.

II. I AM to confider those marks for trial and felf-examination, which are contained in the text.

1. In the text it is faid "then fhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good." Those who are brought to a faving repentance, are disposed to look back on their own ways, and hide nothing from GOD or their own fight.

A LEGAL repentance wifhes to fearch and fee no more of fin and its evil, than will barely fuffice for fafety. Fear is the principle of action, and an efcape from danger is the object fought. When there is a fuppofition of fafety, this point being gained, there is an end of the fearch; and it becomes more pleafing to forget and throw a veil of oblivion, than to fearch deep into the heart, or by remembrance look back on many doings that were not good.

In an evangelical repentance, the heart being right, fin itself is feared and would be feared, though no perfonal danger attended. It is feared on account of its bad nature, and its injurioufnefs to God and his kingdom. To be freed from unholiness is a reigning defire in the foul, and for this purpole, it becomes necessary to look deep into the heart, and examine motives, defires and ends-to look back, remembering old habits, dispositions and actions. A defire of turning the eye from our fins, and of extenuating them, ceafes. Their number and aggravations are foughtout diligently. God is befought, by earneft prayer, to affift in the examination ; and his pure, omnifcient spirit is invoked for aid. The prayer of David is often made, "fearch me and try me, and see if there be any evil way in me."

THE spiritual mourner for sin, often compares his thoughts, words and actions with the holy law-with gofpel precepts-and with the Saviour's holy life; that he may know the extent of his own fin. When by fearching he fees any fin, not before discovered ; though he mourns for the evil, he rejoices in the knowledge of it, that he may confets to GOD and purify himfelf. This will always take place, in that repentance, which is accompanied with a love of God and diflike of fin. Although a love of danger and mifery is not natural to men, and in no cafe a duty ; yet the escaping of danger, is but a smaller motive, with the evangelical penitent. In a legal repentance danger excited him, and he wished to know only fo much, either of his past or prefent fin, as was abfolutely neceffary for an elcape. When holy mourning fucceeds the legal fear, danger is much lefs thought off, and the exceeding finfulness of fin becomes a burden on the heart ; tears of grief gush from the eye, for having been so impenitent and bafe.

THEN, GOD was feared as a threatening judge; now, he is feared as a being fo excellent and worthy, that it is evil beyond defcription to act against him. Then, the law was feared because it has a penalty annexed to it, and a terror of the penalty stung the mind; now, it is feared, on account of holy obligation, which is facredly binding on all creatures.

It is not ftrange that a perfon, with this ftate of heart, fhould be willing to look deep—to look over a whole life—and go back far as memory can help, that all may be confeffed before GoD. When of another temper, he feared divine omnifcience, left his fin fhould be known; now he rejoices in this glorious perfection, that GoD may fee and difcover to him, the extent of his corruption.

2. A HOLY repentance is attended with felfloathing. " Ye fhall loathe yourfelves in your own fight, for your iniquities and your abominations." TRUE holinets is, in all refpects, different from TRUE holines is, in all respects, different from the finful temper, which is natural to men.

LOATHING himfelf, is a paradox to the natural man, and having no experience, he thinks it muft be a miferable ftate. Self is his lawgiver and GOD; and felf-advancement the rule by which he meafures right and wrong, loathfomenefs and agreeablenefs. Let the idol of felf be thrown down, and the true GOD throned in the affections, in this refpect, all things become new. Reafon and judgment are fet at liberty, and the most GOD-exalting doctrines and duties appear most excellent to the mind.

THE mourner in Zion fees that GoD is glorious, in being oppofed to his former character, and that all good creatures, by their averfion to his former temper and delights, give the higheft evidence of the rectitude of their own hearts. Even, if GoD had prepared no punifhment for fin; the fpiritual mourner, in lively exercife of repentance, would determine it better to ceafe existence, than to remain forever with fo bafe and unjuftifiable a disposition.

To this description of penitential feelings it may be objected. If repentance, in its nature, implies felf-loathing, the gospel penitent must always be an unhappy person.

To which I reply, this is an objection, which will never be made by those, who have experienced the grace of repentance in their own hearts.

Serm. XIII. Evangelical repentance.

The felf-loathing mentioned, is not a loathing of their own existence, or any of the natural powers, faculties and capacities GOD hath given them. Existence, simply considered, is always defirable; and it is the perversion of it, which to holy minds becomes an object of diflike. Penitents are not made perfectly holy, and fo far as they find fin reigning in them, they must be unhappy; for fin is the affliction of a christian. It is not proper to call this the unhappiness of repentance; for if the christian were made perfect by the fanctifying power of divine grace, in a loathing of his former corruptions he would be perfectly bleffed. It is the remainder of fin, and not the loathing of it; which makes unhappinefs, in the present state of God's people. Those, who have experienced this flate of mind, will readily answer, our felf-aversion on account of fin, is fo far from making us miferable; that it is a neceffary ingredient of a bleffednefs, the most pure and perfect we ever enjoyed. Our fin is our unhappinels; but our felf-loathing is our comfort. We feel a confcioufnefs of being right, fo far as we can abhor remaining transgreffion.

To be a fpiritual mourner, is very often an exceeding peaceful flate of mind, and accompanied with that light of GoD's countenance, which gives joy unfpeakable and full of glory.

THOSE, who have not true religion, often think a life of piety to be an unhappy one. To them it is inconceivable, how others can be happy in fpiritual duties, in thinking fo much of GoD, and in worfhipping him fo often. As they do not think of another world, except when driven by terrors of confcience, they are ready to think pious people muft be driven by fimilar terrors, and therefore muft be miferable; herein is a great miftake, for pious people are drawn by love, and not forced to duty by terrors of confcience. The heart of one is wholly different from the other. A love of GOD, will make a life of confecration to him, in the duties of religious obedience, a very pleafant one. As GOD is, in his nature, more excellent than the creatures; fo the happinefs of ferving him, will be greater and far more fatisfying, than any enjoyment of the creatures.

By this fubject we ought to examine ourfelves. Truth is of little fervice to us, without an immediate application to the flate of our own hearts. Examination difcovers us to ourfelves. Dowe remember our evil ways and our doings which were not good? Do we look deep into our own hearts, and encourage conficience to fpeak freely, that the worft of our cafe may be difcovered? Do we loath ourfelves for our iniquities againft a holy Lord God? Doubtlefs mifery is difguffful; but this is not enough, and is no evidence of a good effate. May the Lord, of his infinite mercy, enlighten, fanctify and prepare us for his heavenly kingdom. AMEN.

SERMON XIV.

The objects of christian love.

-HE that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in GOD-

IN this state of fin, our minds are not good e-I nough to attain the most just notions of divine things. Through the darkness of fin, we are hindered from fuch doctrinal knowledge, as all would have, if our hearts were right. In fubjects, which are really within the reach of mens finite understanding; we often remain in speculative ignorance, through the influence of a bad heart, on the faculty of understanding and judgment. There is no object, to which the finful mind is more powerfully blinded by an evil heart of fin, than the KINGDOM OF HOLINESS. This kingdom is infinite, for GOD the head of it is fo in his own nature; and the created parts, though not in their own nature infinite, are the emanation of infinite action, energy, power and wifdom from the creator. They are a finite effect, which will glorify an infinite caufe.

226 The objects of christian love. Serm. XIV.

THIS kingdom of holinefs, containing Gon himfelf and his intelligent creation, is the object of holy love. This object, though it can never be comprehended by creatures; to thofe who obtain a true fight of it, exceeds in glory, and they perceive themfelves filled with bleffednefs by the enjoyment. Even a partial fight brings conviction into the mind, that the object, though not comprehended, in its nature, is the greateft poffible; and that a full enjoyment would be perfect bleffednefs.

It is this kingdom of holinefs, united in moral character, which is held up as an object of love by the revelation which we have from heaven. Conformable to this is the command, Thou fhalt love the Lord thy GOD, with all thy heart, with all thy ftrength, and with all thy mind; and thou fhalt love thy neighbour as thyfelf.

GOD and our neighbour compose this kingdom. A love of GOD and our neighbour is the whole law—and a perfect compliance, is perfection in holinefs.

By attending to the word LOVE, in the extenfive use made of it by the facred writers, it is apparent, they meant the whole of that, in which morality or holinefs of character, temper and action confift. God is love, and in this is his whole If this be his nature; his law, gofworthinefs. pel, government, and every true expression of himfelf must be the fame. Love is the fulfilling of bis law, and therefore nothing more will be required from any of his creatures, be their powers of acting what they may. The perpetuity of this in angels is their flanding in holinefs; and the reftoral of it to men, through the gospel, is their christian perfection. He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God-Every one that loveth is born of Gon-These passages, describe Gon as the source, from which holine's proceedeth into the hearts of his creatures; and the exercise of it, as a moral union with him and his kingdom. The phrafe, dwelling in GoD, is expressive to the greatest degree, and describes the highest union that the nature of GOD and creatures can admit. One being dwelling in another, must imply every thing short of an absolute identity of existence; and such is the goodness of JEHOVAH, that he gives his holy creatures, every thing except his own unalienable nature and rights.

THE words of our text, He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in GoD, may therefore be confidered, as defcribing both the chriftian's character and the objects of his affection. It is to the laft of thefe it will be applied in the following difcourfe. In character, he is fo far conformed to DEITY himfelf as a creature can be to an infinite creator; and in the objects of his affection and choice there is a complete famenefs. Dwelling in GoD, is choofing him in his whole GODHEAD, and in all his counfels and works. According to the degree of knowledge communicated, in the perfectly holy creature, there is as complete a union of intereft and will, as there is between the Father and the Son.

THRO' the weaknefs of human conception, the glorious kingdom of holinefs must be viewed by us in its parts, as they fucceffively come before the understanding. The great object of holy affection, must by us be confidered as a number of objects, connected in the counfel of God, but of the fame holy nature. A union to these objects by love, is a fufficient proof we belong to God and his kingdom.

t. God himfelf is the object of fupreme chriftian affection.

HE is the fountain of excellent being, to whom all love is due, and the excellence of the ftreams is communicated from him. In the fervor of devotion Afaph faid, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? And there is none on earth that I defire befides thee. In the divine character, as he hath defcribed himfelf by his works and word, every thing appears amiable to a good heart. All the attributes of his glorious nature; all the counfels of his infinite wifdom; and all the energy of his action in creating, governing and redeeming, delight the foul. Divine lovelinefs is a center on which the affections reft, with a full fatisfaction; fo that nothing can be wanted nor any thing added. This is meant by the commandment, "Thou fhalt love the Lord thy GoD with all thy heart, with all thy ftrength, and all thy mind.

THO' the divine character is difcovered to us by the creatures, the heart doth not reft in thefe; but afcends through them as a medium of difcovery, up to GoD himfelf, and rejoices exceedingly in his glory. All the divine perfections, wifdom, truth, juftice, mercy and forbearance are loved with the fame intenfity of affection. This love is of that kind which produces obedience and fubmiffion; fo that when it is in exercife, trials do not caufe impatience or a wifh to have the divine nature and will changed. GoD is omnipotent and his glory fills every place, fo that thus dwelling in GoD by love, muft be a flate of great peace.

2dly. The revealed law is an object of christian love. There are many expressions of this in the holy foripture. O how I love thy law, I meditate en it day and night. The law of thy mouth is better than gold. I delight in thy law. The law of the Lord is perfect converting the foul. I behold wondrous things out of thy law. All who are good, will unite in these descriptions, and this is a reafon why the holy foriptures are read with fuch pleasure. They exhibit the moral commandments which are a chief object of holy love. The revealed law promotes two important purposes. It teaches our duty to GoD and men, and describes to us the divine character; fo that the good mind will repair to the law, both to know what he ought to be, and to behold the Lord.

In this refpect, there is a great difference between the finner and the fanctified. The finner reads the foriptures, only to know how he may efcape danger; the fanctified to find, behold and adore their heavenly king.

IT is difficult to fuppofe any perfon a true christian, who daily neglects the fcriptures. If GOD be loved fupremely and the heart delight in him as its chief treasure; if it be pleasant to meditate on the unfearchable riches of his glory, and conceive of him, as according to his own infinite knowledge he hath defcribed himfelf, how can fuch an one neglect the written law? In this the Lord makes himfelf prefent to us-brings infinite wifdom down to the apprehenfion of feeble and blind finners-defcribes his goodnefs, with all the diversification of moral excellence, into which it fpreads-and reveals to us the great end of infinite action. Receiving the law with love, is dwelling in love, which is dwelling in GoD; and is evidence of holinefs prepared to enter into the joys of the eternal kingdom in the prefence of God forevermore.

230 The objects of christian love. Serm. XIV.

3dly. JESUS CHRIST, the Son of God and fon of man, in the fulnefs of his mediatorial character, is a chief object of christian love and adoraration.

ON him, the holy mind looks with reverential delight, for he poffeffeth the fulnefs of the GODHEAD bodily, and is the express image of GOD. Unto all who believe he is precious.

ALL men who doctrinally believe there is falvation in no other name befide CHRIST, will fee fomething which they call lovelinefs in the Mediator's character.——It is therefore fit I fhould mention, the different grounds of that lovelinefs, which is feen by a believer, and an impenitent mind.

THE threatening and prospect of mifery is undefirable to all. To every one, means of deliverance from milery are acceptable. After hearing a defcription of eternal pain, to which all are expoled, without a falvation of grace, the polibility of escape must be a pleasing truth. Thus far the mind may go without any felf-denial. It may indulge in prefent fin-be in full opposition to the doctrines and precepts of the gofpel; and ftill be highly pleafed with the truth, that there is a way through CHRIST, in which eternal mifery may be escaped. CHRIST may appear lovely as a deliverer from natural evil. This is not uncommon for those who live under gospel light. Neither is it uncommon for them, to mistake this notion of excellence in the Redeemer, for that precioufnefs which a true believer fees in his character. In this cafe, neither the real evil of fin, nor the guilty state of every unpardoned finner, nor the true excellence of the Saviour, are feen. There is only a diftant apprehension of one who will deliver from a diftant danger ; and it is fuppofed he will be very precious when the danger comes near. All this paffes in the mind without any clear apprehensions of fin, of guilt, and a lovelines of character in the redeeming GoD. It is in this loofe way that unholy men may love CHRIST; and their supposed fafety makes them fecure in fin. They are inattentive to their hearts, praising GoD with the mouth while, in practice they deny him.

THOSE who dwell in GOD through JESUS CHRIST, see far different and greater glories in his character, and he becomes the object of their affection for more noble caufes. In him they fee the glory of a divine nature and love him as they love the Father. The mediatorial excellency with which they are delighted contains many particulars, of which a principal one is, that he hath honored Gon-hath revealed him-difplayed his perfections-glorified his truth, juffice and goodnefs-caufed the divine attributes through his own face to fhine on benighted finners, and by the fame means brought the greatest honor to GOD, and a most rich falvation to the guilty. When divine honor is near the heart, CHRIST will be loved for having glorified the Father ; and in meditating on mediatorial excellence, this is felected as a reason for admiring him.

He loves CHRIST JESUS for having magnified the law, and made it honourable.

To a pure mind the law appears very excellent, and being an expression of GoD's most holy will is an object of ardent love. Both the precepts and penalty of the law, are made more glorious than could be without the gospel, and CHRIST is precious for having magnified the commandment. Every christian heart is united to the commandment and all the means by which it is gloriously displayed.

232 The objects of christian love. Serm. XIV.

THE Redeemer is precious to a holy mind, for the difplay he hath made of the nature, principles and end of divine government. It is thro' the Son, that GoD's infinite wifdom and goodnefs and the perfection of his government are brought into the fullest light. Whatever the law fays, the gofpel approves ; whatever nature difcovers, the gospel confirms; and it still goes further in displaying the glories of GODHEAD-the excellence of his perfections-his great defign in creation-the pure maxims of his univerfal government-the perfect justice and mercy of that administration, which flows from his nature and partakes of his holinefs-the vaft amount of bleffednefs, which will be communicated from him to his furrounding family—and his fixed purpofe, as he hath begun, fo to govern forever. Thefe are the greatest causes of christian affection to the Mediator.

WHILE gratitude for perfonal favors is high in the pious heart; the honor of GoD, his law and his government, which is promoted through the Saviour, produces a still higher affection to the Redeemer. Thus CHRIST is precious and beloved by all who believe-thus he is loved for having glorified the Father-magnified the lawrevealed the kingdom-and united in himfelf both the things in heaven and the things in earth. In admiration of this vaft object, the christian forgets himfelf and rejoices in GOD alone.-How different is this delight in CHRIST, from the love exercifed by an unfanctified mind ! How different from a love of him for fake of the loaves ! How different from loving him through the falfe notions, that he hath lowered down the requirements of the law, or repealed its penalties, or died for us in particular. All these notions may confift with the pride of human nature, and without any true apprehension of the moral glories in GODHEAD, which emanate from him to the knowledge of creation, through his law, gospel, and universal government.

4thly. ALL the doctrines of the gospel are delightful to a christian. The divine scheme of grace is according to the will of GoD, according to his holy nature, and in all respects worthy of infinite purity. The obligation to holinefs, fubmission, renunciation of ourselves, and a perfect obedience to the law, is greater on every creature after hearing the gofpel than it could be before. It is this which caufes fo many objections to the evangelical fcheme, and divides a world professedly christian, in their opinion of its doctrines. All men to whom doctrinal instruction comes will go fome length towards receiving it. Feeling guilt and mifery, when the news of deliverance is announced, it is acceptable. When they are told, that falvation is through a facrifice of himfelf made by the Son, and that GOD is very merciful in this way, it is still acceptable. Indeed they will go every length in approbation, until called to part with fin-give up their unholy pleafures—humble themfelves that Gop may be all in all-and be holy as he is holy. Here is the parting point between miferable finners and the gospel of grase. Here arises an opposition to evangelical doctrines, which hath divided the profeffing christian world into parties. These perfons are not christians indeed. They wish deliverance from a law terrible to them, while they cleave to the very temper which is forbidden. They do not reject christianity, but do not relish fuch a fystem of united grace and holiness. They make various attempts to feparate from the fcheme of mercy, fuch doctrines as are most unpallatable; and to build a fuperstructure of faith, which will fave without humbling them fo low, and without that holinefs, which confecrates to GoD the whole being and all the fervice of the creatures.

IT is not thus with the christian indeed. Every doctrine of revelation is an object of his affection, and he doth not with any article of faith or practice to be changed. He fees the excellence of truth in every doctrine, and feels the whole to be worthy of GOD and applicable to the wretched flate of fallen finners. He believes the depravity which is charged on men-feels it in himfelf-and beholds it in his fellow creatures. He fees that no other gofpel could glorify GoD, fanctify the unholy, and forgive the guilty. He wifhes falvation, in a way, that will give to GoDall the glory both of purchasing and applying; fo that the doctrines of atonement, free justification, divine fovereignty, renovation by the Spirit of the Lord, abiding in CHRIST by faith, and doing all for the glory of GOD, are the very truth which bind him fast to the scheme of grace. With great humility of heart he rejoices in this fystem of mercy, and knows the whole to be worthy of infinite wildom and love.

I MAY, particularly, mention the chriftian doctrine of felf-denial, as one which gives pleafure to a fanctified heart. CHRIST often told his followers, that unlefs they denied themfelves and took up the crofs they could not be his difciples. To deny a few worldly pleafures, or bear fome occafional worldly evils without murmuring againft God, is not the whole that is meant by thefe precepts. It is difficult for unholy minds to go only thus far, and further they never go. The meaning of the doctrine—the true chriftian felf-denial is to give up ourfelves; not only to bear fome hard things, and deny fome worldly pleafures, which may be done on lucrative principles, in expectation of a future repayment; but to give up our whole felves, and willingly become nothing that GoD may be all in all. This doctrine of felf-denial is pleafant to all who are renewed through the gofpel of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, and their happinefs is most perfect, when all their powers, faculties, and exertions are abforbed in devotion to GoD, and the fervice of his holy and righteous kingdom.

5thly. It is the law of GOD, "Thou fhalt love iby neighbour as thyfelf"—" Beloved, let us love one another : for love is of GOD; and every one that loveth, is born of GOD, and knoweth GOD." Alfo our text faith, " He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in GOD."

ALL the holy are proper objects of a complacent love, and all our intelligent fellow creatures of a benevolent affection; both of which are found in the heart of every christian. A love of GOD and of our neighbour are neceffarily and uniformly connected; fo that the absence of one, in all cafes, determines the other to be wanting. The heart, which choofes GOD, will love his kingdom, his rational image, and the fubjects capable of happinefs, who have been created by his power and goodnefs. Hence, it pertains to the christian temper to be kindly affectioned one to another, and to embrace every opportunity of doing whatever may be for the prefent or eternal benefit of others. This enlargement of heart flows from the fanctifying grace of GoD, and will be found in his people, in proportion as his Spirit dwellethin them. Confined affections are a most certain evidence of our wanting the Spirit of JE-SUS CHRIST. Brotherly love is effential to the temper of a difciple, and will do good on every opportunity to every creature—the whole family of heaven and earth, which is created and preferved from the fulnefs of eternal love.

HENCE, in the divine word, christians are defcribed to be perfons, who overcome evil with good-mourn with those who mourn and rejoice with the rejoicing-do good to all men-love and pray for their enemies-are pitiful-are courteous-who abound in good works-feek the falvation of miferable and guilty fouls-and deny themfelves much, that many may be profited .--This comes from the nature and objects of chriftian love-a heart difpofed to do good in the moft extensive manner, and to the greatest number of recipients. While deftitute of these feelings, it is vain for any to think themfelves the difciples of God's Son. Unlefs we have hearts which feek for fubjects of happinefs, and defires which fpread through earth and afcend to heaven in kind affection, we are not the brethren and imitators of him who died on the crofs to fave his enemies.

I MIGHT proceed to many particulars, in defcribing the objects of christian affection and love; but enough have been mentioned, to give a general idea, of the union between all holy fouls and the glorious kingdom of holinefs.

In the moral conformity and exercise of love, confists the union and communion of GoD, of angels and the redeemed faints. The words of our text describe a wonderful truth—a wonderful kingdom—a wonderful heaven of holiness and joy, where all are united in character and affection. This union of affection is begun by the chriftian fanctification—it is the kingdom of heaven already commencing in the heart, which fhall progreflively increafe until the complete union in heaven, where all fhall dwell in the DIVINE LOVE, and he fhall fill every foul with the eternal, the lifegiving action of his holy fpirit. CHRIST often fpoke of his Father and himfelf being one in his people, and of their being one in him; alfo in the fcriptures there are many defcriptions of this union, all of which lead our minds to the glorious fubject contained in the text, the mutual indwelling of GoD and his people by the perfection and union of holinefs, thus forming the great kingdom of holinefs which is the object of chriftian love.

THIS indwelling of love is the most correct idea of heaven which can be attained in the prefent flate. Curiofity prompts many inquiries on the fubject. What is heaven? This question often passes both in holy and unholy minds. Prefumptuous conjectures are hazarded, and false defcriptions are given, most commonly according to the imperfect taste of those who indulge them. Our revelation from God tells us nothing on this fubject, merely to gratify curiofity; but every thing which is necessary for our preparation.

HEAVEN is a moft holy fiate. It is the indwelling of GOD in the foul, by the fanctifying energies, and the communicated fenfe of his love. It is all the active and affectionate powers of the foul going forth in love to GOD himfelf, and to the kingdom which is according to his will. The beginning of this in the heart, is that dawning of heaven in the foul, which is permitted to the fons of GOD in the prefent world. It is the formation of the kingdom within them which fhall grow into eternal glory. It is an all-fatisfying good, therefore the difciple faid, Show us the Father and it fufficeth us, flow us the glory of God-bring us near to it by communion-bring his love down into our hearts-and draw forth our most fervent love to him, and it is all we need or ever can receive. This is the only bleffed and glorious heaven a good mind can wish. The defire of christians is always for a greater fulness of what they have begun to taste, and not for any enjoyment of a new kind.

THE fubject is well adapted to affift us in felfexamination. In a point of fo great confequence, as eternal falvation or the lofs of it muft be, we ought to bring our expectations to the fevere correction of truth, and to do it frequently. The fuppofed chriftian, who is unwilling to examine himfelf, and hear rules of trial brought clofe to his heart and confcience, difcovers his own infincerity.

WE have confidered fome principal objects of chriftian love, and thence inferred a defcription of the heavenly flate and bleffednefs. If thefe be the objects of our own love, there is fufficient evidence of our gracious union to GoD, who is reigning in his holy kingdom, and bringing finners to himfelf through his Son JESUS CHRIST. He is ever glorious in the eyes of his faints-their most revered and beloved king. The voice of their hearts is, " Ob, that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his feat," and this defire is not confined to days of prosperity. Job expressed it in days of affliction, and fo will every chriftian. Though bruifed by the ftrokes of the Lord's hand, instead of contending with his righteoufnefs, the heart is drawn to him by a confidence in his wifdom, and the excellence of his nature. None can deny the most glorious Gon himfelf to be the chief object of christian love. Is it not a law of human action to feek the objects we love? To be prefent with them, if poffible, and converse with them by meditation in a neceffary abfence? Is it not thus with the earthly objects of our choice? We feek them to be near us, and when feparated by time or diffance, our thoughts still purfue, and every little circumstance around us, is eagerly caught, to make their images prefent with us. Do we thus feek the Lord? Is he prefent in our thoughts? Are we looking for him in his works of nature and providence? Do we with a daily pleafure obferve the marks of his being and attributes, which are engraved on all he does; and feeing them do our affections afcend to him? Certainly, if we loved him this would be the cafe. Our conversation is in heaven, faid the apostle. There our thoughts and affections afcend, feeking him who is the object of our fupreme love. When he vouchfafes to meet our feeking hearts, and bring us into his banqueting houfe, and fhine around us with the light of his glory, it feems like a heaven begun on earth. Enough of this, is perfect bleffednefs and glory. Thofe, who do not feel thefe effects of christian love, are in an unsafe state. They may profess-they may hope-they may do many visible duties ; but the whole is defective if the heart be not joined in love to GoD. Where there is this union of holy affection he will be remembered by day and by night, and all his laws will be obeyed.

By the word heaven, men in general mean a ftate of perfect happinefs; fo that from the apprehenfions of that ftate, which they wifh to eftablifh, the moral condition of their hearts may be very ftrongly conjectured. Those, who are disposed to conceive artificial arrangements and natural beauties to be the principal glory of heaven, and feclude a conftant view and enjoyment of GoD's glorious holinefs, do thereby evidence their want of union to him, and of a preparation for divine communion. To a holy mind, the conftant view of infinite rectitude, with opportunity to adore and praife, will be a most pleafing part of the heavenly life.

FURTHER, Thofe, who drop JESUS CHRIST from their life of daily religion, cannot be chriftians indeed. Many are willing to have him for a diftant Saviour, and depend on a scheme of grace introduced by infinite wisdom through him; who, neverthelefs, do not wifh to dwell with him, to have him reign in their hearts, and go to him constantly for strength to ferve GOD and refift their own lufts. To every one who believes, he is precious-his prefence is foughthe is their fpiritual life as well as the way to the Father-and their hearts mourn his absence. They feel their ftrength to be from him, and that when his aid is withdrawn they are cold in duty and backflide to the world. If our fuppofed religion, be of fuch a kind, as can be fupported without a daily intercourfe with JESUS CHRIST, it is not that evangelical holinefs to which the promifes are made.

UNHOLY men may love thofe, who, they fuppofe love them and promote their interefts. On this principle a multitude of infincere perfons followed CHRIST when he was on earth. They were tempted by the loaves, and not drawn by the moral glory of his character. As great a multitude have followed him profeffionally ever fince, who love him, only becaufe they think he hath loved and received them. Self-love may carry men a great length, in praifing their fupposed deliverer from eternal misery; and when they add to the account an immortal inheritance, in which they expect to receive high dignity, the felfish affections may break forth in rapturous hofannas. CHRIST may be thus received without any union of heart to him and his kingdom; and he is loved only for the gifts he hath to beflow. The glory, that is supposed to be feen, is in the gifts and not in the character of the giver. Afk the felfish believer why he loves CHRIST? His heart will reply. He hath loved me, hath died for me, hath delivered me from eternal mifery, has given me eternal glory. Who can refrain praising and loving one, that offers fo many benefits. Propose the same question to a fanctified chriftian, and his heart will reply, Behold the glory of the GOD man Mediator ! See how excellent he is in himfelf! Of all the benefits he can beftow on a guilty creature, a permiffion to behold, to praife and glorify him, is the greateft. I love him for his worthinefs; I receive him, being irrefiftibly drawn by his excellence. In felfexamination, the greatest care ought to be used, to diftinguish these two kinds of love. It is to be feared, that by not attending to this diffinction, many are deceived, and fallely think they are united to the kingdom of CHRIST. Under this delution, natural affection may rife to great warmth, and cry, come fee my zeal for CHRIST; though the whole be no more than zeal for felfintereft.

WE ought, alfo, to examine ourfelves by our apprehensions of the divine law.—If the law appear pleafant and good, and its duties be our meat and drink, we may rejoice in hope.—If we love the kingdom of GOD and wish to ferve it forever, it will be given to us.—If we love the brethren, we are born of GoD, and fhall dwell with him and with them forever more. May we all be infpired by the chriftian prospects and promises, to purify ourfelves and grow in love unto eternal glory. AMEN.

Chriftian doctrines 'reafonable.

ROMANS XII. I.

-WHICH is your reasonable service.

THE duty, which is here faid to be a reafonable fervice, is to prefent our bodies a living facrifice, holy, acceptable to God. Our bodies are particularly mentioned in the exhortation, ftill it doubtlefs extends to the whole man, for holinefs is eminently a quality of the mind; and the next verfe, explaining the duty, fays, Be ye tranfformed by the renewing of your mind. It is a reafonable thing, that the whole man, both body and fpirit, in all his faculties and powers, and the perpetual application of them, fhould be confecrated to his most glorious Creator and Saviour. This is required by the laws of religion, and every good man both feels and rejoices in the obligation. His heart never rifeth against the duty, except in certain hours of backfliding, for which he is ashamed of himfelf, and feels guilty in the fight of GOD, when reclaimed by the power of his grace.

ALTHO' our text, in the apostolic exhortation, applies specially to the duty of felf-confectation; I shall give a larger scope to this discourse, and endeavour to show that all the doctrines and suties of christianity are reasonable—approved by a found judgment and honess heart—and useful for the glory of GOD, and the best good of his creation.

In this rebellious world, every kind of objection is made against the rights of Deity and duty of creatures. Some openly espoule the reign and the pleafures of fin; and many, under a profeffed friendship, either infidiously undermine the doctrines of grace and holinefs unto the Lord, or by their practice deny the confession of their lips. Whatever their words may be, their practice tells us, the doctrines and duties of revelation are not reafonable. Doubtlefs, their practice is the most true expression of their hearts. If circumstances could be fo changed as to remove a fear of GOD and men, by which there is a prefent reftraint, they would openly avow religion to be unreafonable, both in its doctrines and duties.

I AM fenfible the pious, believing chriftian doth not need conviction, that the faith and practice of the gofpel are reafonable. His heart is made honeft, and approves whatever reafon approves. It is the rational fitnefs of chriftian doctrine and duty by which he is charmed, and made fervent in 1pirit ferving the Lord. Although fuch can be in no want of evidence- to reconcile them to their duty; it may increafe the warmth of their pure affections, and renew a pleafure which they have often felt, to review the glorious fitnefs of their Lord's doctrine and commandments. And as the most funcere are exposed to very painful temptations, it may fortify them against those dark hours, in which the powers of fin, are loosed against them, to try the strength of their confidence and love.

IT is not expected that perfons of an oppofite character, whofe hearts are wedded to themfelves and their fins, will cordially feel that religion is a reafonable fervice; or its doctrines worthy of a GOD, who hath infinite reafon. Prejudiced, by an evil heart of unbelief, they are continually combating, even the weak and partial conceffions of their own reason which are favorable to the christian doctrine. Their intelligence is more than mifapplied, for it directly impugns the wifdom of God, calling his doctrines foolifhnefs, and his requirements hard fayings. How ftrange the appearances in a finful world! Wicked creatures rebelling against a good GoD; weak creatures against a GOD of infinite power; unhappy creatures oppofing the only means for perfect peace; and creatures who glory in their reafon, often denying the reasonabless of that scheme of government and grace, by which infinite wifdom brings the greatest honor to GOD and makes his kingdom most happy .- These fad effects of fin ever have been, and ever will be, where there are apostate creatures. But notwithstanding this, GOD is glorious in all counfels. The cavils of enmity and error are unfounded. On candid examination, it will appear, that every doctrine advanced, and every duty required, in the holy oracles, are reasonable. They are approved by common fense and an honest judgment; and useful to the great interests of fociety.

IN illustrating the fubject, I shall diffinguish between the doctrines and duties of christianity; and concerning each of them endeavour to show, that they are reasonable, worthy of GoD, and confistent with such laws of natural existence as can be determined with certainty. Also, that they all tend to happiness or natural good.

By doctrines, are meant, things to be believed; by duties, things to be done.

ALL the doctrines of chriftianity are reafonable; and those which are known only by revelation, harmonize with fuch laws of natural existence, as can be determined with certainty.

In this difcourfe, the word reafonable doth not mean pleafing to the heart. It is a well known truth, that the most reasonable duties are very difagreeable to an unholy mind. They never can be otherwife, until the heart is changed by the power of divine grace. If any, when they call the doctrines and precepts of GoD unreasonable, mean unpleafing to themfelves; we concede it in the fullest extent. We beg them to confider their own awful fituation, fo long as they are difpleafed with the infinite reafon and wifdom of God. It is a condition of heart without hope and peace. It is, further, believed that many who join with the irreligious multitude, and object against the equity of christian faith and practice, are wholly governed by the tafte of their own hearts. The only argument they can bring against it, is this, we are not pleased with it, it doth not delight us, and to receive it, we must part with many things we love.

A DOCTRINE, which men are unable to comprehend, may be very reafonble. This is proved by the different rational powers imparted to mankind. A doctrine, which is mysterious to one perfon, through the weaknefs of his reafon; may, in the view of another, be intelligible and glorioufly rational. If it were not thus, all those truths of infinite wifdom, which are high above the understanding of mortal men, might be impeached as folly. In showing the reasonableness of christian doctrines, we do not expect to explain them in their whole extension to the weak reason of men. It is enough to show their usefulness, and that they do not imply an impossibility, nor contradict other truths which are more plainly evidenced to our understanding; and this is the case with all christian doctrines.

Some doctrines are fupported by evidence both natural and revealed; others, only by a revelation from infinite truth. It is the latter which impiety first attacks, because, it is supposed they may be most easily confuted. The existence of a holy GoD is the most disagreeable of all truths to an unholy mind; still fome acknowledge this, who affect to deny the Trinity and an Incarnation. If there were no natural evidence of the supposed to deny his being, as they be to discredit the Trinity, that peculiar and glorious manner of existing, in which the scheme of redemption originated. All truth depends on the existence and character of GoD.

1. The character, which is given of GOD in the christian scriptures, is most reasonable and glorious.

THE being of a GOD, is not a doctrine peculiar to chriftianity. The belief of it is among heathen, and over the face of the earth where chriftianity hath not been yet received. But when they knew GOD, they glorified him not as GOD, by, fuch defcriptions of his nature, character, counfels and will as are worthy of an infinite and most holy being. Things the most debafing, puerile and impure have been afcribed to the Almighty first cause, by heathen superstition and fin. This hath been the cafe, among highly civilized people, who were eminent in refinement and arts, as well as among barbarous tribes. It proves the ufefulnefs of a revelation in affifting men to fee the natural evidence of GoD's most holy character.

How pure ! how reafonable and glorious the revealed character and will of GoD !---

A BEING eternal, infinite in power, every where prefent, omnifcient and moft wife. A being independent and felf-exiftent, who created and preferves all things according to the counfel of his own will. A being of infinite goodnefs, whofe name is love, and whofe tender mercies are over all his works. His fovereignty is the powerful ordering of infinite righteoufnefs; and becaufe his motives can be drawn from no other fource which is permanent and good, he draws them from within himfelf.

He is raifed above partiality, above temptation, above the poffibility of defiring what is unwife, or doing what is evil.

He confiders his only glory to confift in being and in doing good, and is most glorified when his kingdom is most bleffed. All the terrors which he hath prepared, whether they be temporal or eternal, are defigned to aid the operations of love—to show its excellent and glorious nature—and make his holy kingdom the most like to himfelf in a pure bleffedness. This is the fum of those perfections and counfels, which God hath ascribed to himfelf in his word. Can there be a more perfect, more lovely, more glorious character? The justice which unrighteous men hate, and guilty men fear, according to his own unerring description is the acting of goodness; and if it did not exist, a universe now glorious in bleffedness, would be a universe of pain and horror. Is not this revealed character of GOD moft reafonable, moft glorious? Compare with it the notions of divinity which have been formed by heathen fin; or by the few inftances of infidel reafon fcattered in chriftian lands; how debafed ! how impure they appear !—And all their defcriptions in contradiction to natural light, are coloured with the bitternefs of their hearts. It appears moft clear, that feeing the truth and righteoufnefs of Gor, they were ftill ignorant of his lovelinefs—and his goodnefs which they knew, and daily experienced was the object of their dread, and the alarm of their confciences.

Serm. XV. Christian doctrines reasonable. 249

2dly. IT is reafonable that GOD fhould give to men a revelation of himfelf and his counfel,

THE notion that reafon fuperfedes the need of revelation fhows great philofophical ignorance, as well as corruption of heart. What is reafon, but a power of judging and determining truth, from evidence prefented before the mind? Reafon cannot judge between truth and falfehood without evidence. What is revelation but evidence of truth? Revelation is none the lefs neceffary becaufe men are rational creatures, for without evidence reafon would be a ufelefs gift. We may as well argue against the natural evidence in creation and providence, as we may against the revealed, and fay, man is a rational creature and therefore doth not need it. The objection against revealed light, because men have reafon, most evidently arifes from an opposition of heart to the truth, and of courfe, to the evidence by which it is difcovered.

FURTHER, it is reasonable for GOD to give us more evidence of truth than we find in creation and his providential government. There are many ways and kinds of evidence. We find this to be the cafe, in prefent things; and why not, alfo, with respect to the things of an unfeen GOD, of his government and eternity to come. Can truth be too well known, our duty too plainly marked out, or our affurance too ftrongly built? Can we know too much of GOD and his everlafting counfels in which we are interested? The objection against revelation, because fome of the truths which it contains, are alfo evidenced to us in another way, is fo contrary to common fenfe, and to what every honeft mind would wifh and call a favor, that we cannot afcribe it to any caufe but enmity against GOD. As evidence increases, the evil heart is wounded, and denies the need of light because its deeds are evil

FURTHER, many truths which are neceffary for the glory of GOD and good of men, can be communicated only by a revelation. This is the cafe with fundry christian doctrines. The Trinity of GODHEAD, the Incarnation, and the manner of Redemption thro' the blood of CHRIST, are doctrines of importance to guilty finners. A revelation appears to be the only possible way of communicating them to our knowledge, fo that our faith may give strong consolation. It is not conceived how creation, on its prefent conftruction ; or providence, on the principles of divine acting, could teach thefe things. And was GOD under obligations to use only one manner of inftructing? Or hath he no truth, useful for us, and glorious for himfelf, but what our weak reafon might learn from the works of nature? To pretend this, is trifling with Almighty power and wifdom, and treating the great JEHOVAH with greater indignity, than one guilty and weak creature would be willing to receive from another.

How ftrangely finful pride fwells itfelf againft GOD's wifdom, juffice and goodnefs! This is its nature, and it will continue to fwell, until the Lord is pleafed to fhut its mouth.

IT is a most merciful and reasonable thing in GOD, to give us abundant evidence of his nature and will, of his government, and of our own duty and end.

THERE yet remains an infinite feries of truth in the divine underftanding, which is unknown by creatures, and which his goodnefs will incline him to communicate to them, as they can receive it. Infinite wifdom will determine the progrefs of ways, means and times, by which it can be beft done. This will be a work for eternity. Thofe who do not like to retain a knowledge of GOD in their minds, will think the new lights of the world to come, to be as unneceffary as they now think a revelation to be. Every means of bringing the divine character and will into view will meet the oppofition of their hearts.

IT has been inquired, why, if a revelation be neceffary to answer the purposes of infinite goodnefs, it was not given in the beginning? The question is unwife. It betrays, both a want of confidence in divine wifdom, and ignorance of the means by which the holy creation is formed and approximates to its final perfection. The way must be prepared for the communication of truth. One kind of evidence must precede to make the admiffion of another poffible. The history of mankind, and their fins and miferies, for four thousand years; and of Gon's dealings with them, was neceffary to prepare the human mind, for feeing the gofpel scheme and doctrines, in the clear manner revealed by CHRIST and his apostles. We may conclude, that truth is evidenced to creatures, by all poslible means of inftruction, and as faft as the evidence can be formed and laid before them. This is illuftrated by the revelation we have received. How much of it, which was obfcure at the time of giving, is now made plain by events in the divine government, which have intervened. How much ftill remains to be obfcure, which will be clearly underftood in the approaching ages. The expreffion is plain as can be, but obfcure to us through the want of illuftrating events in the providence of God. We may therefore conclude, the evidence of truth by a revelation, hath been given, in the earlieft hour it could be received, and in a manner adapted to fill the world with the greateft light.

3dly. THE Trinity of GODHEAD is a pillar in the christian faith.

ALTHO' it be a deep and mysterious doctrine, it is not, on this account, the lefs reafonable. While the Trinity of Father, Son and Holy Ghoft is most clearly revealed in the fcriptures, there is no attempt to explain it; which fufficiently intimates, this glorious manner of divine fubfistence to be above our comprehension. It is not strange that GODHEAD is incomprehensible. Who can comprehend any one perfection of the fupreme nature. Wifdom, righteoufnefs, love and power, by their infinitude, become incomprehenfible or mysterious to us. Neither, are mysteries confined to God's effential being ; for the manner of our own existing, and the works of nature are full of mysteries. We cannot tell how a plant grows; or the mind perceives, thro' an external action on the organ of hearing. If mystery warrants infidelity, or renders faith unreasonable, we must disbelieve the existence of GOD and creatures.

WHILE the fcriptural doctrine of a Trinity is myfterious, it is ftill fo limited, as to be in no refpect incredible; and the revealed advantages refulting from it, both to the everbleffed GoD and his creation, render our belief of it reafonable. His Trinity is confiftent with his unity. He is not three, in the fame fenfe, that he is one. He is not three in any fenfe inconfiftent with unity of counfel and action. He is not three, in fuch a manner, as to produce counter obligation on his creatures, divifion of interefts, or confufion of defign. He is not three, fo as to imply imperfection or control, in either of the perfous in his glorious Trinity.

THE fupreme existence is most perfect, and although his Trinity be mysterious, we may see that it adds to his perfection, and may therefore, be reasonably believed of an all perfect God.

I wILL instance this in two respects.

1. IT fhows that the divine obligation to moral rectitude, and his eternal choice of holinefs, arifes from the nature and manner of his own exiftence.

2dly. THIS manner of existing, admits the exercife of mercy to guilty finners, in a way most glorious for himfelf.

enant, promife and fulfil to each other. Of this, the covenant of redemption and its execution, is an inftance. Here is fociety in its most glorious form, with all its refulting obligations and bleffednefs.

HENCE, we fee the high fource of moral obligation, in the infinite; alfo, in the focial nature of the everbleffed God. The origin is most facred, and the divine will is inclined to virtue as neceffarily as he exists. Rejoice O ye righteous for the Lord your God must be holy. The law of holines which you love and are commanded to obey, flows from the manner of his incomprehensible existence.

2dly. THIS manner of existing, admits the exercise of mercy to guilty finners, in a way most glorious for himfelf.

AFTER the law of his own nature was violated by men, and they had become guilty and miferable, his manner of existing in Trinity, admitted the gofpel atonement, through which there is forgivenefs of fin, and an acceptance to his bleffed prefence. Infinite wifdom must judge in what manner fin can be forgiven with fafety. It is a question, in its nature, above human determination; and we have no reason to think forgivenefs would be right; but through an atonement. Nor have we any reafon to fuppofe any other than the gofpel atonement, which depends wholly on GoD's own Trinity of nature, could be adequate to the forgivenels of fin, and purchafe of eternal glory. On this wonderful manner of divine fubfiftence, ftand both the law and the gospel. It is the high, the peculiar truth of chriftian revelation, and goes far to enlighten us in the nature and counfels of GoD !

But this manner of existing is mysterious.— We allow it. So also, is every divine attribute; fo, are the works of nature around us; yea, a thousand things, which we feel in our existence; yet we do not reject them on this account. A mystery doth not imply a contradiction or impoffibility. A mysterious truth must be deemed reasonable, if it be implied in the perfection, and neceffary for the bleffedness of an infinite nature; and also for the good of his intelligent universe. Usefulness is always a prefumptive argument for reasonablenes.

4thly. THE incarnation of JESUS CHRIST, is another mysterious doctrine of the christian revelation, which its enemies wish to represent as unreasonable.

THIS doctrine describes the Mediator to be both GOD and man. The Son of GOD in pof-feffion of his whole divinity; uniting with himfelf a perfect and innocent man, formed by his wifdom, for the purpose of displaying divine holiness, atoning for fin, and fulfilling a righteoufnefs, through which tranfgreffion may be glorioufly pardoned. This union of the divine and human natures, is fuppofed to exift, in the higheft degree, without a communication of those attributes and properties to one nature, which were originally peculiar to the other. That it is a wonder, a mystery, a mighty work of GoD, all chriftians allow; but, that the belief of it is unreason. able, doth not follow. If it be poffible, and alfo useful; it is worthy of God's infinite reason. wildom and goodnefs.

THE incarnation is possible.

THE man CHRIST JESUS, was a creature of God's own forming. The power of creating, implies the power of affuming his workmanschip into any kind of union with himfelf, that is pleafing to his wifdom. The myftery of this union between infinite and finite, is no greater to us, than the union between our own fouls and bodies, which no rational man will deny becaufe he cannot explain it.

THE incarnation is worthy of infinite wifdom.

THIS must be determined, from the effects it is defigned to produce; which are made known by the word of God. The effects are the greatest which can be conceived, and are worthy of infinite wildom. Is it not worthy of GoD, to fave. an innumerable company of guilty creatures, from eternal fin and mifery and bring them to a life of glorious and endless peace ? Is it not worthy of him to glorify himfelf and make his kingdom happy by the difplay of his perfections, and thus enjoy the goodnels of his own nature? These are the effects of CHRIST's incarnation. Effects fo great and good must be glorious for GoD; and though, in view of our weaknefs and guilt it is infinite condefcention, in view of the glory which GoD brings to himfelf, it is a most credible event.

THE facred evidence of this fact in the divine government is very great. That JESUS CHRIST was man cannot be doubted. He must also be GOD, for divine names the most peculiar to Deity, divine perfections and works, and a perfect equality and likeness to the Father are ascribed to him. He is called the Creator, and appointed to be the Judge. Divine glory, in the redemption of finners, made it reasonable this astonishing event should take place.

To finful mortals, who are filled with the pride of rank, it may appear degrading, for an infinite Gop thus to unite himfelf with a creature. But it doth not appear thus to perfect wildom and goodnefs. The jealoufy of rank cannot belong to him. His majefty is the majefty of love; and he is fearful in the praifes that will forever be offered to his condefcending mercy.

5. The christian foriptures declare the total corruption of human nature, and the doctrine is fupported by fuch evidence, as renders our belief of it reasonable.

WE must act directly against reason and common fense to deny this truth. There is evidence of every kind, which the nature of the cafe ad. mits; and every thing which appears in men to be any better than total corruption, is accounted for in full confiftency with the doctrine. The history of the world, both facred and profane, proves this truth. All men have in practice departed from GoD, and their actions have been fuch as evince an unholy heart. Even those who deny it in words, by a manifest distrust of their fellow creatures, give proof of their own conviction; and fhow that their denial is a prejudiced business. In the rashness of inconfideration, men may do and fay any thing; but no confiderate man-no man whole confcience appears to be in lively exercife, dare deny his being naturally inclined to do evil, evil only, and that continually. As the evidence of our total depravity, by nature, hath been given in a former difcourfe, I shall not repeat it in this place; only observing, that if the christian foriptures declared the purity of human nature, finners themfelves, would allow this to be a fufficient reason for rejecting them.

THE introduction of fin hath been a point of difficulty in all ages. WHENCE COMES EVIL, is a queftion which hath perplexed many, and will continue to do this, until there is more confidence in GoD's wifdom and more fubmiffion to his fovereignty. But this difficulty doth not difprove the flubborn fact of its existence. The plain and natural account of the introduction of fin, which is given in the fcriptures, must be allowed reasonable, until a more reasonable one is offered. It is prefumed, no one will pretend, this hath yet been done.

6thly. IT is a doctrine of the christian fcriptures, that GOD hath decreed what foever comes to pass.

By this is meant, that in fovereign and holy wifdom, and by motives derived from within himfelf, he hath determined the whole fcheme of created exiftence, with all its parts, agents, their moral character, their demerits, and their end in everlafting happinefs or mifery. Alfo, that this determination is fo abfolute, there cannot be the fmalleft deviation from what he hath purpofed; but the whole fhall come into exiftence, exactly according to his fupreme will, in the fucceffion and at the time he hath appointed, and by fuch means as he hath predefinated.

I KNOW that by afferting this I am on the forbidden ground of fome, who, without doubt, believe the chriftian feriptures; alfo, of the whole multitude who difbelieve, and whofe hearts are ftill unhumbled by the fanctifying grace of GoD. But if this doctrine be most expressly revealed in the chriftiain feriptures; if it be pleafing to a holy heart; if it be neceffary to prove there is a GoD of infinite perfection, and for the highest good of the rational universe, it is reasonable to believe it.

THIS doctrine is most clearly revealed.

It is written, He hath determined the times before appointed. Being predestinated according to the pur-pofe of him who worketh all things after the counfel of his own will. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will be hardeneth. The counfel of the Lord standeth forever. My counfel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. The Lord hath made all things for himself, yea the wicked for the day of evil. I form the light, and create darkness; I-make peace and create evil, I the Lord do all these things. In these, with a multitude of other places, the fupreme efficience of GoD, acting according to his predeterminate counfel, is most expressly afferted.

THE divine determination of all events, is a doctrine pleafing to a holy heart.

THERE needs only a fufficient degree of love and confidence in GoD to make the doctrine agreeable. A holy mind can have no rational motive to oppofe the fovereign decrees of GoD. If GoD be wife and good, and able to create and govern in the most perfect manner, certainly it is best this should be the cafe. We must either deny these perfections of Deity, or own the doctrine to be excellent, or that our own hearts are not willing the best should take place. Few will dare deny the first; and to own the last impeaches the judgment, and denies any credit to be due to it.

SUCH a multitude of things have been faid, in this rebellious world, againft the abfolute decrees of GOD, that it is not ftrange fome honeft minds fhould be prejudiced againft the doctrine. It is very poffible that a good man, through education and other powerful influence, fhould fometimes doubt; but I am ready to appeal to the heart of the doubting good man, and inquire of him. You are willing that a government the beft, even in the moft minute particulars, fhould take place

You believe God to be most powerful, wife and good; yea, far more wife and good, than you have feen, or can conceive a creature to be. Is it not best, that he should form and execute a plan of existence from eternity to eternity? Would you not truft this with him, fooner than with yourfelf or any other being? Under all things that happen, is it not a ground of joy to you that God reigns; and if there were any events, which you abfolutely knew to be without the fystem of GoD's decrees, would not this be fufficient caufe for you to fear them? I am certain every good mind, in answer to these queftions, will reply, the doctrine of GoD's abfolute decrees is to be defired. We always find this doctrine is received with pleafure, by those who give other evidence of a holy, humble and fanctified temper.

THE doctrine of absolute decrees is neceffary to prove there is a GOD of infinite perfection; and for the greatest good of the created rational universe.

MEN often doubt concerning a doctrine, without confidering the confequences, which will refult from a denial of it. To deny this doctrine, in its confequences, falls little fhort of denying the fupreme exiftence. Let those who fear dangerous confequences, take the burden on themfelves, and show us a fcheme of belief, which denies the doctrine and is not followed with confequences much more to be dreaded than those which they oppofe.

LET them show us an infinite, all-wife, omnifcient and most perfect GOD, as they allow JEHO-VAH to be, acting without a plan. Let them show how it is confissent with infinite wisdom to create a universe, without determining, in all respects, how he will govern it, to what use he will apply it, or what its ultimate condition shall be. Or if he did determine thefe things, and hath not all within himfelf to effect his purpose, or if it be possible he should be disappointed; let them show how this is confistent, with an infinity of perfection both natural and moral. Let them show how foreknowledge can exist without foredetermination. By attending to these things, we muss allow the absolute decrees of GoD, by which all events from eternity to eternity, are determined, made certain, and come to pass according to his predestination; or we muss doubt the infinite perfections of GODHEAD.

FURTHER, this doctrine is necessary to assure the greatest good of the created universe.

THE absolute and influential decree of infinite wifdom and goodnefs, is the only certain evidence we can have, that all things will be conducted and end in the best manner. Go off from this ground, and we meet a gloomy uncertainty what will take place. If there be not a divine plan most absolutely determined; or if this plan is liable to be frustrated; or if the state of creatures, in point of character, action and reward be not made unalterably certain, we can have no affurance of any future glory. No individual can have ftrong confolation, either for himfelf or the general state of the universe. Order may be turned into confusion, light into darkness, and happinels into milery; and this universal and without a remedy. The predetermining decree of God, founded on the infinite perfection of his nature, is our prime evidence, that all things will be beft.

THIS doctrine of christian revelation must be reasonable, if every good mind, understanding the subject, will rejoice in it; if the belief of it be neceffary, even to conceive a GoD of infinite perfection; and if it be required to affure us, that the univerfe will be ever preferved in the moft glorious condition. If the doctrine could be proved untrue, it would inftantly fpread a gloom over the univerfe, which could not be diffipated. If the doctrine had been unknown and were now revealed, the humble, the holy and all who delight in the character of GoD, would rejoice in the difcovery, as an æra of light, beaming thro' a whole eternity to come.

7thly. WHEN we come to confider those christian doctrines, which respect the application of redeeming grace, they all appear to be glorious for Gon—worthy of his power—agreeable to his goodness—adapted to the real wants and miseries of mankind—and fufficient to raise them from death to life, from wretchedness to peace and glory.

FORGIVENESS, and a renewal to holinefs are the two great things which finners need. Both thefe the christian foriptures aforibe to the power and grace of GoD, through JESUS CHRIST.

WHAT is there incredible in the doctrine of fanctification by the efficacious power of the Spirit ? Do we not need to be changed ? Do we not need affiftance in turning from fin to holinefs ? Do we not find our own evil will to be very unconquerable ? Is not this the very wretchednefs of finners ; that they will love their fin until GoD changes their hearts? Sinners may imagine they can turn when they pleafe, but they will never pleafe to turn, until they are turned by Almighty power. They turn from mifery ; but not from fin which is its caufe. Herein is their remedilefs fituation without GoD's renewing grace. That gracious power of renewing the heart, changing the tafte, bowing the will, which is contained in the gospel, is one principal thing, by which it is adapted, to the relief of miferable finners, and makes our belief of it reasonable. A gospel without the aid of divine renovation, though it were in all other refpects complete, would leave finners in the very flate it finds them, under fin and fuffering, ____After GoD hath prepared the way to give his Spirit and work glorioufly for himfelf, is it unworthy of him to create holinefs, in those hearts which are now utterly destitute of it? Is it unworthy of his goodness to help the weak, enlighten the ignorant, purify the unclean, and give joy to those who have destroyed and made themfelves miferable? It cannot be. The doctrine glorifies his goodnefs, and is adapted to the need of miserable men, therefore, our belief of it is reasonable. To those, who have felt their fpiritual impotency, the doctrine appears to be their only hope. By experience, they know the need of divine power to change the heart, and to give and fustain the exercise of grace. They know their own weaknefs, through remaining fin, and the power temptation hath over them; fo that, if there were not a promife of gracious affiftance by the Spirit of GoD, they would still despair of eternal life. From the conviction of experience, they are disposed to afcribe every thing, to an efficacious fanctification from above.

FURTHER, What is there unreasonable, in the doctrine of our justification, by the free grace of GOD, through the righteousness of JESUS CHRIST? Certainly we need this favor, for we are guilty, and ruined and miserable. There can be no objection to the doctrine, as being unneceffary for sinners. So long as their own confciences condemn them, it cannot be doubted, whether GOD may do it juftly. To be pardoned and accepted by him muft be a defirable thing; and who, without it, can appear happily before him? It is therefore reafonable to believe we need this mercy.

NEITHER is it unworthy of infinite goodnefs freely to justify milerable finners, fince his wifdom hath concerted and effected the means, of doing it glorioufly for himfelf through the rightcoufnels of JESUS CHRIST. Divine mercy is not an attribute, which will do a private favor at the expence of public good, and of his own glory as moral Governor of the univerfe. Since, his wifdom hath made it honourable for himfelf and fafe for his kingdom to accept finners, it cannot be thought unworthy of his dignity. It is a work of goodnefs, and goodnefs is always honorable. Goodness is the glory of GoD, and the more undeferving the fubjects of mercy, the more he is glorified in the beftowment of his free and wonderful grace.

OR is it unreasonable that this mercy to finners, fhould be granted through the righteousness of Jesus CHRIST?

HERE human pride may have its objections, and from an unwillingnels[•] to be dependant on grace, fo fovereignly purchafed and applied, may fay it is an unfit thing, for a finner to be accepted and glorified, through the righteoufnefs of another. But when we confider what is meant by this, all appearance of unfitnefs and inequity vanifhes. By ftanding in the place of finners, CHRIST did not become a finner, nor mar his own infinite purity. He did not relinquifh any divine right, nor become ftained with moral turpitude. He voluntarily fuffered that othersmight be benefitted. And might he not reafonably endure pain for his own glory, the glory of his father, and the procurement of eternal glory for multitudes who muft otherwife fuffer an eternal hell? In this gracious and glorious transaction, there is no transferal, either of fin or holinefs, which were acted by one being ; fo as to become the fin or holinefs of another being. In the fcriptural fenfe of this transaction, CHRIST might reasonably put himfelf in the finner's place. He might fuffer, to make peace on earth and bring glory to God in the higheft.

AND may not a holy GOD, acting reafonably, accept his fufferings and obedience, fo, as for the fake of them, to fanctify and forgive offending finners? GoD takes no delight in the death of the finner. Pain or mifery, confidered by itfelf, is not pleafing in his fight. In the penalty of the law, he appointed it, not for its own fake, but to difplay his holinefs, and maintain his government against the rebellion of fin. Whatever answers the end, for which the finner's punishment was ordained, may be accepted; and the transgreffor may thus become a candidate for mercy. The facred obligation of the law, and all divine perfections are displayed by the sufferings and obedience of JESUS CHRIST, so, that forgiveness may be granted in a way glorious for God. The fixed holinefs of his nature and government," beam forth more brightly, through the life, death and obedience of his Son, than it poffibly could by the eternal execution of juffice, in those whom he is pleased to forgive. In this case he may reasonably forgive through the righteousnels of his beloved Son. The doctrine is a wonderful difplay of divine love, and permits those to hope, who might justly be cast off forever.

THERE are feveral other doctrines peculiar to the christian faith, which I shall not at this time mention; for it is prefumed, they neceffarily follow from those which have been noticed. A fingle difcourfe, from its brevity, only admits hints on this glorious fubject, which deferves a copious illustration. Christianity claims, not only to be reasonable; but to be gloriously reasonable, above every scheme of faith or practice, that hath been received in the world. Its reafonablenefs is its great ftrength. The pure, great and good character, which it afcribes to GoD; the wonderful union, and rich display both of justice and mercy, which is made in the way of falvation; the means it provides for making Gon glorious in forgiving; the ability of the Mediator to fave to the uttermost them who come to GOD by him; its fufficiency for all the wants of guilty finners, will forever prove it to be the fcheme of GoD's own wildom.

BRING a finner to penitence; to feel his guilt, his wants and miferies; to know what he is and what he deferves; and at this moment fet before him every scheme of religious faith that hath been in the world, and all the ways of rendering a holy GOD propitious, he will fay, without hesitation, give me the christian faith, give me CHRIST for a Saviour. If I can obtain this faith, in its true and fanctifying exercife, God will be glorious in forgiving, and I shall be happy in receiving. This faith will give me all the benefits of a pure righteoufnefs; and though I am a guilty creature, I may be pardoned; though I am a weak creature, I may be ftrengthened. It will give me a balm for every wound; and the oil of joy, for heavinefs. He will rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

ALL, who reject the christian revelation, must be under two infuperable difficulties, which are fufficient to caft a gloom over their most cheerful hours. They have no expiation to offer to GoD, in their pleading for mercy, but their own finful mortifications. They have no righteoufnefs to urge, but their own imperfect obedience. They have no affurance from his own mouth, fin can ever be forgiven ; and taking it as granted that it may be, still, the manner how is left to their own loofe conjecture. After they have fixed the point, that GOD is a good being, how can they be affured, his goodness will dispose him, or make it a confiftent thing for him, to forgive finners who deferve to be rejected? This is a great difficulty which must spread a gloom over their death-bed. They must think, though we feel penitence, it is not known for certainty, that penitence will be accepted; for even goodnefs may require us to be eternally cast off. This is a trial which reason can never furmount. They must leave the world, either, in the fecurity of ignorance and a hard heart; or, take eternity at forlorn venture, it may be peaceful-it may be infupportable torment. Here, the christian believer may rejoice, in hope of mercy through an all-fufficient Saviour, and relying on the promife of a most true God.

ANOTHER infuperable difficulty in the way of difbelievers is this. They have a rational conviction of fin. They have often refolved, and found their refolutions inefficacious. They have ufed means without avail. They have no promife, no encouragement of a fanctifier. They believe nothing of a purchafed and efficacious influence, to aid their weaknefs, and fit them for near communion with a holy God. Thefe are the best prospects infidelity can afford, and they are gloomy indeed ! May the Lord mercifully enlighten us, and through the gospel of his Son prepare us to dwell with him forever. AMEN.

SERMON XVI.

Christian duties reasonable.

ROMANS XII. I.

-WHICH is your reasonable service.

THE prefent is a day of great declension from christian faith and practice. The number of difbelievers, compared with the whole number of men, who have a doctrinal acquaintance with the gofpel, is greater than it hath been in any past period of time, fince christianity was published. This is a wonderful and instructive By the fulfilment of prophecy and other event. means, the evidence of truth is made greater than ever before. At this moment of increasing light, there is also increasing infidelity. This shows the folly of men, the nature of fin, and the weaknefs of means, when not accompanied with the efficacious fpirit. It is a proof, that men were never finful through want of evidence for their duty.

LEST christians should be difcouraged, this defection was foretold in the fure word of prophecy, as a mark of the last days, when GOD will come to avenge his injured caufe by heavy judgments on mankind, and prepare the way for a more pure flate of his church. This abounding of corruption in faith and practice, ferves, by way of contraft, to difcover the excellence of the chriftian religion. The incredulity and impiety of fome, together with the practice proceeding from their unbelief, prove chriftianity to be neceffary for the peace of the world. It must be more neceffary for peace in the world to come. This conflict will end in a full demonstration, that chriftian doctrines and duties are reafonable, and worthy of divine wifdom.

THE reasonableness of christian doctrines or articles of belief, was confidered in the last difcourfe. Some of the most important were mentioned, and those particularly, which are mysterious to human understanding. The more we examine them; the more clearly it will appear, their mystery doth not imply contradiction, nor a natural impoffibility. They elevate our conceptions of God's natural and moral fulnefs, and provide a remedy for the mifery of finful men, in a way confiftent with divine glory. No other scheme of belief admits a Gon of such transcendent excellency, and a created kingdom of fuch purity and peace. Therefore, a belief of chrif-tian doctrines is reasonable. This being admitted, it goes far to prove the duties of christianity to be reasonable; and to this point the prefent discourse will be devoted.

ALL the duties of chriftianity, whether moral or evangelical; whether arifing from natural relations or politive inflitutions are a reasonable fervice.

BEFORE these duties are mentioned, I must be permitted to address a class of persons, many in number, who suppose christianty is their religion, and intend to die in this faith, yet are entirely destitute of its practice.

ALTHO' fuch do not choofe to be thought infidels, their cafe is dangerous, and they have no title to the benefits of that belief, in which they have been educated. Their doctrinal faith is, in a great meafure ufelefs to them. Even so faith, if it bath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, thou hast faith and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one GoD; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

THE end of doctrine is to produce practice in the heart and in the life. Practical religion in the heart, is more important than any thing external. Although there cannot be practice without doctrine, it is certain, that doctrine alone will never fave a man. Sinning against greater light, he may be more guilty in the fight of God with, than without it. There is no need of my attempting to prove, that many come under this defcription. They fee the great and folemn works of providence, without any confideration. They hear the word of Gon, and do it not, and are like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass : for he beholdeth himfelf, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. They live under the full beams of christian light, ftill, in all respects relating to vital religion, live as they would do, if placed among a heathen people.

CONCERNING fuch perfons we may observe.

THEY appear to think it a matter of little confequence, what men's religious opinins are. With them it is enough, if they profefs to have fome opinions. It hence appears they think all religion a civil, fafhionable thing, and that a holy preparation for eternity, and a pure conformity to GoD is out of the queftion. Thefe people are in part right, for if practical religion in heart and life must be put away, it is of little confequence what opinions are embraced. On this fuppofition, opinions are only a fashion for the day, will die with the perfon who holds them, and have no faving effect for eternity.

FURTHER, fuch perfons are not folemnized by the truth.

THEY may often come where GOD hath appointed focial prayer to be offered, and may fit before him as his people; but their fervice is more fitly called the civility of a christian land where providence hath placed them, than a worfhip of the Father in spirit and in truth. Even in the fanctuary they do not feel a present GoD, nor an accountablenefs for the opportunity. Confession, is of the tongue only, without feeling. Decorum without piety is the most that is attempted; and having paid the fervice of the week, though the time be still facred, vanity rushes into the heart, flows from the lips, and marks the actions of the concluding Sabbath. Is this religion? Is this that love and fear, which is due to a God of infinite glory and holinefs? Is this a true concern, or real preparation for the immortal interests of the foul? Is this a piety, which can confole the pains of a death-bed, and illumine the folemn, unexperienced path from time to eternity? No, it is not.

WHERE is the love, the reverence, the conformity to Gor? Where is the deep fense of guilt, the unfeigned humility, the despair in his own fervices with which a felf-emptied finner goes to CHRIST? Where is the love, with which a true difciple leans on the bofom of JESUS, and finds a beginning heaven in the company of his Saviour? The devotion, the fire of the facrifice is wanting. How aftonifhed with the fight, and with his own guilt, will fuch a foul be, if taken in a moment, from the formal and fafhionable worfhip of this world, to behold the pure devotion of Jerufalem above !

IN describing perfons of this character, and fetting their defect before them, I ought, again, to mention.

THEY are displeased with the spirituality of religion. Duties of the heart are as much beyond their creed, as they are wanting in their practice. They are ready to wonder, as Nicodemus did, on hearing the doctrine of the new birth, and fay, How can this be, or why is this neceffary? This is pufhing religion to an un-pleafant length. If this be true, I must be in earneft; I must think as much of GoD and another world, as I do of my farms and merchandize; I must forego my pleasures, and begin a life of prayer, in which I never delighted; I must be more anxious for my foul than for my honor; more defirous to fet my house right with GoD, than to cheer it with the found of the tabret and the pipe. To fuch, the life of piety, and a holy walk of communion with GOD is mysterious. They know not the thing, nor do they wifh to believe it. Spiritual ftrength from CHRIST, and rejoicing evermore in GOD and his government, is the ftrange thing with which they defire no acquaintance. Such are the perfons, who live at eafe in Zion, in the very place where GoD hath, taught the spirituality of religion. While in their own opinion christians; they live without GOD in the world. There is reason to fear, his comforting presence will be as far from them in their death, as they have been from him in their lives.

PRACTICE is the end for which doctrine was given, and if one be reafonable the other is reafonable alfo.

WHAT is the practice, which GOD requires ? Can it be, that a few religious civilities will fatisfy a holy God? When he tells us to love him with the whole heart, to mourn for fin, to walk before him in deep humility, to rejoice in him evermore and pray without ceafing, and to ftrive that we may enter in at the ftrait gate; by all thefe, can he mean we should doctrinally believe these things to be right, and pretend the performance without doing them? Christian duty begins in the heart, and an original defect here, must vitiate the whole in his fight. God is not a being to be mocked, and he claims an obedience of the heart as his right. My fon, give me thy heart. Our love of God ought to be with all the heart. As the abounding of infidelity, justifies an attempt to fhow the reafonableness of christian doctrines; fo the neglect of vital and experimental practice, requires us to flow the danger of a general declension in this respect, and that many, whole doctrines are right, are perishing through want of obedience in heart.

1. It is reafonable we fhould love GOD with the whole heart, ftrength and mind.

NEITHER a profession of duty and obligation, nor any external fervice amounts to evangelical obedience, if this supreme affection doth not exift in the heart. Moral obligation arises from what God is; from his truth, goodness and righteoufnefs; from the divine love or holinefs, by which he doth good to himfelf, and is disposed to communicate from his own fulnefs in the bleffed existence of creatures. His character is lovely, whether we have hearts to love him or not; or whether our own fituation be defirable or the contrary. When GoD claims our obedience, he appeals to his own will, and what he is in himfelf, as a reason why we should obey. He never attempts any other proof of our obligation, of his right to command and our duty to obey, than the greatnefs, glory and excellence of his own nature and will. It is what he is, independent of man's disposition, which makes our supreme love reasonable. If it were not thus, there could be no fuch thing as obligation, holinefs, fin and guilt. Whatever a bad heart may fay, still common fense approves this truth ; and whatever finners may wifh, their confciences do notwithftanding certify them, that a character and moral objects which are holy, have an inherent fitnefs for which they ought to be chosen. There is no truth more plain than this; none, which hath the more general affent of mankind; and a denial of it deftroys the existence of moral obligation.

THE divine worthinefs of love is teftified by his works. He hath not left himfelf without a witnefs, in that he hath given us our existence, our capacities of knowing and enjoying, fruitful feafons, the comforts of time, a knowledge of himfelf, a perfect law for the direction of our focial intercourfe, and a glorious fcheme of grace to reclaim us from fin to our duty and to eternal bleffednefs. All these things witness the fulness of GODHEAD, and prove our supreme love of him to be a reasonable fervice.

IF there be fuch a thing as lovelinefs, its exist-ence may be traced up to Deity, the infinite fountain; fo that our fupreme affections ought never to ftop fhort of him. If the creatures have any excellence, who is the author, and by whofe will is it fuftained in being? As every thing, which is worthy of love, flows forth from him; fo, through every thing as a medium, our fupreme love ought to flow back to him again, and it is but a reasonable service. Our divine instructor calls this law of loving GoD, the first and great commandment. Those who live in disobedience reject their whole duty and must be altogether condemned. It becomes them to inquire what excufe they can make; for they cannot deny the duty to be reafonable, neither can they plead a want of knowledge.

AFTER all, if any doubt whether GOD really requires our fupreme love, and marks the daily want of it, as a great fin; let them flow us the reasonableness of their prostituted affections. Let them teach what there is in their own imperfect, and finful natures, that is worthy to be loved more than GOD. Let them defcribe to us those excellencies in the perishing creatures, which are worthy to be brought into comparison with God. Let them compare weaknefs with ftrength, ignorance with knowledge, folly with wildom, impiety with infinite holinefs, and human frailty with most glorious felf-existence; and then flow us that it is reasonable to love themfelves and the creatures more than God. None are wife, but those, who have brought themselves to the most strict examination in this point.

2. The felf-loathing and mourning for fin, which accompanies repentance towards GoD, is a most reasonable christian duty.

THIS is practically denied by all who do not repent; and fome are fo fixed in their impenitence, as to make light of the grief which every christian feels, in view of his fins committed against a holy and good GOD. Turning from fin, hating it, and felf-loathing for the commission, are effential to repentance. Now mine eye feeth thee, wherefore I abbor myself, and repent in dust and asses. Then shall ye loathe yourfelves for your iniquities. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to beavines.

In the fame proportion as fin is wrong, we ought to mourn, and to loathe both its past dominion and present influence in us. No rational man, by felf-loathing for fin, understands a hatred of his own existence ; but an abhorrence of the temper, through which he hath misapplied his talents to an unworthy end. If fin be wrong we ought to loathe its dominion over us, and whatever we have done contrary to our duty. It is reasonable that the degree of felf-affliction fhould be proportioned to our injury of GOD and men, and when this is feen justly, the grief will be greatthe abafement be deep and heart-penetrating. A man cannot abstain from loathing himself for what he diflikes; and those who make light of christian mourning for fin, and think GOD doth not require us to afflict our fouls deeply for tranfgreffion, flow the following things. That they have never feen the glorious holinels of GoD; are unacquainted with the evil of fin; have not come to a knowledge of their deep corruption ; and have parted with fin only through fear of the punishment.

To fee the reafonableness of repentance and mourning for fin, we only need confider the glorious objects and ends to which it is opposed.

Ĭ

It is oppofed to GoD himfelf in his whole nature and government, to his bleffednefs, to all his rights, to his wife laws and government, and to the good of creatures. Chriftian repentance is exercifed in fight of this, and muft therefore contain a very fenfible affliction of the heart. And though a mourning for fin, will not reverfe what has been committed, it is neceffary evidence of a prefent good temper, and cannot fail to be found in a fanctified foul. If it be reafonable to love and rejoice in GoD, there are the fame reafons for the mourning of repentance, and they will ever be united.

3dly. The christian duty of dedication to GOD is a reasonable fervice.

THIS duty is not effentially different from loving him fupremely; for we are, in fact, dedicated to the object of our chief love. Love is the confecrating, dedicating act of the mind, by which we give ourfelves away to the object of affection. But although fupreme love and per-fonal confectation, may one imply the other, it is proper to diftinguish them in confidering this subject.-Nothing is more hard to a finful mind, than it is to live for GOD and CHRIST, and whether we eat or drink or whatever we do, to do all for his glory. This christian requirement appears unpleasing to all who do not love GoD. They can find no happines in it; nor do they conceive, how it can be a pleafant thing, to regard the Lord in all their thoughts, words and actions. It appears to them an obstacle in the way of all their joys, and that the happiness of living must be given up, thus to obey. The unpleafantness of this duty to every finful mind is conceded; but this is no evidence it is not reafonable.

God is the fountain of being, from whom we received our existence, and who upholds us every moment. All we are, all we posses, all our powers of acting, and capacities of receiving, are his gift; fo that we are his property in the highest fense. Is it not reasonable he should have the use of his own property, and command us according to his pleasure? If there be such a thing as the right of property, it belongs to the creator; and the requirement is reasonable concerning our own personal actions and fervices.

ALL we possels is a divine gift, placed in our hands, under certain limitations of use.

Is it not reafonable we fhould devote our ufe of his gifts to his honor and the purpofes of his infinite goodnefs in giving ? He gives on thefe conditions, and we have no right to depart from the conditions of the gift.

THE Lord our GOD is most excellent, in his nature. His glory and bleffednefs exceed a whole creation in value, beyond any proportion, which can be defcribed. Is it not reafonable for the finite and dependent creature, to devote himfelf to the great all in all?

THE glory of GOD and the happinels of his kingdom are infeparably united in the divine counfel and providence. What infinite wifdom hath thus joined together, no creature hath right to put afunder. Chriftian confecration is, therefore, to the kingdom of GOD. Every fervice of holy dedication, tends to promote the good of our brethren. It either glorifies GOD whom they love and delight to fee honored, or is beneficial to our brethren of his family. And is it not reafonable to have our whole being devoted to the glorious kingdom of CHRIST—to do good —and to promote that holinefs, from which the most pure happinefs proceeds?

To be devoted to God, and whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, do all for his glory, is the greatest honor, and most perfect happines of a creature; and therefore a reafonable fervice. The felfishness and pride of fin are felf-disappointing. With a purpose of exalting himself, the finner falls into deep degradation and loofes the perfection, of which his nature is capable. With the purpose of acquiring happiness, and under the power of an all-grafping felf-love, he loofes the rational blifs of intelligence and finks into pain. Separated from GoD he hath nothing, but the littlenefs of a dependent guilty creature. He can never make himfelf more than he is; nor by other means be fo honorable, as he may by confecrating himfelf, body and fpirit, to the fervice of the Lord.

To become a living facrifice to GoD is beginning the life of glory. And let the common fenfe, even of an unholy perfon anfwer, which is the greateft happines; either to enjoy himfelf and the few things within his grafp, for a fhort feafon, or to be made of a temper, which prepares him to enjoy GoD and his kingdom forever and ever. By calling us to prefent ourfelves a living facrifice, holy and acceptable to GoD, he is calling us to the greateft dignity and peace, and therefore the duty is reafonable.

STILL the refufing heart will object; to be fo confecrated to GoD, as to feek his glory in eating and drinking, and in the common actions of life, is a thing impossible, and it is beyond the power of weak man to comply.

BUT let me ask, how is it impossible, and why are they unable to comply? Men do now act from motives in eating, drinking, and the common actions of life. Is it not as possible, to do the fame things from better motives, as from the finful ones by which they are now influenced? Unlawful things ought not to be done from any motive whatever; but, refpecting all things which are right, it is as poffible to do them from good as from evil motives. The want of a good heart is the only difficulty in complying. It is poffible to do all things from right motives. It is poffible to perform every action, under a fenfe of duty and moral obligation to GOD and the fystem of existence with which we are naturally connected. This is what is meant by that confectation to GOD, which doeth all things for his glory. It is feeling ourfelves to belong to GoD; to be his creatures; that we have duties appertaining to us, which are fufficient to fill up the whole time of life; and actually doing them with this temper. Although, it may be impoffible to have the glorious nature of GoD in actual perception, every moment of time and in every action performed; we may still act, in every thing we do, under a fense of moral and holy obligation. This is the duty required, and it is a reafonable fervice.

4thly. IT is reasonable, that the lives which we live in the flesh, should be by faith, in Jesus CHRIST the Son of GOD.

THE fupreme giver of every good and perfect gift, even in the cafe of those who never finned, may rightfully prescribe the manner in which he will bestow. This is an evident right of fove-M m reignty; and from his infinite wifdom and goodnefs, it may be prefumed, he will appoint the beft manner. Much more may he prefcribe to guilty finners, who deferve utter rejection, how they shall approach to ask, and how receive his undeferved favors. From his own information, we know that infinite purity forbids any other approach, than through his Son. Thus he can honourably give; and thus we may most copioufly receive. Neither prefent nor future bleffings can be claimed as a matter of right. Faith in-JESUS CHRIST, is going to GOD through him as a Mediator, to receive what we need. Is it not reasonable that creatures should go to Gon for the fupply of their needs, and that guilty creatures should go in the manner he directs? Do they not need a daily affistance-the light and quickening of his holy fpirit? Looking to God through a Mediator, with a fenfe of their dependence and unworthinefs, for fuch temporal and fpiritual mercies as they need, is what chriftians mean, when they speak of living by faith, in JE-sus CHRIST the Son of GOD. It must be reafonable for GOD to beftow and for us to receive, in the manner, which is most glorious for him, and which, at the fame time, fupplies our wants most perfectly. It is conceived, no one can object against the daily communion of faith in GoD and CHRIST, unless pride of heart forbids, and divine holinefs is distasteful.

EVERY other christian grace is approved by reason. Is it not reasonable for creatures, in all cases, to submit to divine fovereignty; knowing that infinite wisdom and goodness will appoint in the best manner? The inefficacy of a resisting will, and the ignorance of creatures what governmant of the universe is best, are considerations which teach the propriety of submission.

PATIENCE under afflictions is a most excellent christian virtue. The condition of human life is exposed to innumerable evils, and no man hath a right to expect himfelf exempted from the lot of finful, weak humanity. A great portion of the facred writings is calculated to infpire a patient spirit.-And is it not reasonable? We have the example as well as the command of CHRIST. To fhow the wifdom of providence in impofing trials, we ought to confider our defert at the hand of a holy Gon-the witness he ought to bear for his own rectitude, by his treatment of us-and the benefit of afflictions, to those who endure them. They are a purifying furnace.-Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous : nevertheless, it afterward yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness, unto them which are exercised thereby. Patience is a most reasonable duty.

5thly. VISIBLE christian morality, in all its branches, is a reasonable fervice, being neceffary both for the glory of GOD and the good of society.

VERV few will dare to queftion the excellence of chriftian morals, as defcribed in the gofpel. The moft vicious fear the crimes of other men, fo that there is a general confent, even of the immoral, that vifible morality is reafonable and to be defired. In this refpect, the chriftian precepts excel all other writings. Arguments for vifible morality are drawn from the higheft fource, the nature and relations of Gop and his creatures.

CHRISTIAN duties must proceed from an honeft and benevolent heart. Such general rules of practice are given, as will comprehend every cafe. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.— Therefore all things whatfoever you would that men Should do to you, do ye even so to them .- The law of the decalogue, is explained by innumerable gofpel precepts, giving it the most extensive application to every character, condition and circumstance of life. Our neighbourly love must reach to all men. All are to be treated justly and honestly .- Their rights of person, property, purity and reputation are declared to be facred.-The highest good of every one, for time and eternity, is to be fought.—We are to love and pray for enemies and do them good .- Revenge is forbidden, in every cafe; and we are to recompenfe evil for evil to no man, but to overcome evil with good. We are directed to be fubject to government-in honor to prefer one another-to be kindly affectioned-to purfue the things which make for peace-to remember the poor, the widow and the afflicted, and to be like CHRIST who went about doing good.

FROM a multitude of fimilar precepts, we learn the excellence of visible christian duty to men our brethren. It is also easy to see why the christian morality, is more pure and extensive than the heathen. The heathen morality is all drawn from felfish principles, and extends no further, than they were driven by necessity for their own immediate fafety, in the civil compacts of life .- The christian morality has a higher source in the principle of benevolence to being, and will, therefore, include every thing and extend to every cafe, where the happiness and perfection of rational minds is affected. This law of vifible morality is good like GoD who gave it. It will make us refemble him-make us the most happy we can be, and most instrumental of good to our brethren. If there were no evidence in favor of christianity, but the superior reasonableness and excellence of fuch moral duties, as are commanded between men; this would be enough to eftablifh its obligations on all. In comparison with it, every other scheme of faith and practice must give way.

IN christian practice, we may also include feveral duties, which depend on a positive institution. Of this kind are the gospel ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper. That these are reasonable, will be contended by none, who have a previous conviction and love of the doctrines and personal confectation to God, which have been already confidered.

THE fitness of prayer to Gon, is acknowledged by those who have not the christian scheme of faith. Although prayer be much enjoined it does not wholly depend on a positive institution .---So with refpect to the Sabbath, there is natural evidence that fome part of time ought to be devoted to the worfhip of God. The positive inftitution, of a feventh part of time to be thus devoted, appears reafonable. If we had not this precept, through our inclination to forget GoD and depart from holinefs, all worship of him would be foon omitted by the greatest part of men. The heathen, who have stated feasons for their idolatrous worfhip, appointed by their own authority, have fucceeded in perpetuating their times and rites, only by making them carnivals of fin and fenfuality. The fanctification of a Sabbath is, therefore, a reafonable fervice.

THE more we examine into chriftian doctrines and duties, the more apparent it becomes that they are agreeable to reafon and common fenfe; glorious for GOD and declarative of his perfection; and adapted to relieve finners from their guilt. The chriftian may challenge mankind to fearch his doctrines and law of practice; and he may be affured that examination will terminate in their favor. If it be demanded why he glories in being a christian, he may appeal to his doctrines and law of holinefs to anfwer for him. If it be objected, that many unreasonable articles of belief and wicked practices have been found among the professors of christianity, who claim high feats in the church ; he must appeal from these fcandalous examples, which cannot be denied, to the Holy Bible, which contains his creed and his law. He must show the objector that the most holy inftitutions, doctrines and laws, may be perverted, proftituted, and mingled with corruption by unholy men. He may appeal to the objector's own heart, and tell him; that the fame averfion to chriftian holinefs, through which he opposes the doctrines of revelation, hath led others, who have still called themselves chriftians, to mifreprefent, to divide, to explain away, or to mingle human invention with the pure truth and precepts of God. Alfo, that many, retaining a true faith, have had the form without the power of godlinefs.

CHRISTIANITY hath a right to be judged, by its own books, and its written articles and laws; and those who diffonor it, either by wilful perversion to accommodate it to their own lusts, or by difobedience, must bear their own guilt.

SOME few, who have fallen into infidelity, have doneit after much inquiry and with an actual knowledge of the evidence in favor of chriftianity. Such perfons have followed the choice of their own hearts, and there is very little reafon to expect they will ever be reclaimed. They have treated GOD and his gofpel contemptuoufly, and becaufe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be faved. For this caufe, GOD hath feut them firong delution, that they fhould believe a lie. It is the duty of christians, to use all means for reclaiming even such, still, there is little reason to expect success.

THERE is a very great number of people, in a different fituation, whom I importune to confider. It is those who doubt, and have not yet come to a fixed conclusion. They are willing to reject christianity because they find no pleasure in the duties of religion .- It forbids many things, which are agreeable to their tafte; it reftrains their appetites; and calls them to a difagreeable felf-renunciation. On these accounts, they are willing to difbelieve, if it can be done fafely. Added to this natural temptation, they find a multitude of their neighbours in the fame cafe, who are ready to make a common caufe with them, in doubting the most facred truths. They hear fome, who are far advanced in the fchool of fcepticifin, ridiculing and fcoffing; and others, of incurable morals, blafpheming. Thefe great-er finners, are often found, among the affluent, the profeffedly wife, and the powerful ones of the world, by which means, they have a great ad-vantage, either infidioufly to feduce or haughtily to infult. Thus feduced, by their own inward corruptions, and the temptations around them, their doubts are becoming more bold. Inftead of confulting the holy fcripture, with a candid wifh to know the truth; they rufh into circles of impiety, hoping to hear fome jeft or argument against the religion of CHRIST. Instead of going to the closet, and imploring direction from the Father of light, they take counfel at the mouth of perfons, who are talkative through vanity and ignorance. They are really, all this time, ignorant of christianity, and their whole attention hath been to find objections, rather than to underftand its doctrines or fearch for the reafonablenefs of its duties. They begin to confider reafon and revelation, in a flate of natural oppofition. They begin to effeem their appetites, a guide to happinefs and greatnefs.—They begin to effeem the piety of their Fathers to be fuperflition, and pity the ignorance of the laft age. They confider the lethargifed flate of their own confciences to be a fortunate circumflance, and hope foon to find the liberty of fin, in thinking and acting as they pleafe, without any premonition of death to come.

O UNHAPPY men ! You are near the limits, beyond which, fovereign grace, either never or very rarely, brings infidels back again to hope and peace. You are not abfolutely fixed in rejecting his word, nor are your confciences finally feared. A few fteps farther, in this courfe, will probably place you in a ftate, with which GoD hath faid his Spirit fhall not ftrive. After a few fteps further, you will probably feel eafy concerning another world, and there will be no bands in your death. You have feen fome of this character die without fear ; but do not hope much from this circumftance ; for the worft of men, as often die in ftupidity, as the beft do in chriftian triumph. Stupidity, though prefumptuous, hath no peace in it.

IF death fhould approach, while of the character I have fuppofed you to be, you will be terribly furprized. You will not dare to die; you cannot hope. You will find a GoD angry with fin, and feel the need of a mediator. You will find, that fin is mifery; that your own unholinefs is a curfe; and that GoD need only leave you to yourfelves to make you eternally miferable. Confcious of guilt in refifting the light, you will groan in fpirit, not daring to look towards an injured heaven for needed light and grace. You probably will fay, I feel myfelf unable to pray, and you will beg the ferious perfons, whom you once ridiculed, to pray for you. Alas! Your cafe will pierce their hearts with forrow, and they will try to pray, but it is uncertain whether they can; for if Gon hath left you, they will find their clofets deprived of that divine aid, through which, on former occafions, they have often called fervently and effectually on GoD.

To all, who have not formed an ultimate determination to reject, let me propose the following questions; and let me beg of them to confider and give an answer to their own conficiences, in some place fuited for prayer and meditation on GOD, and with an open Bible in their hands.

WAS not a distaste to the duties of religion, the true reason you began to doubt ?-Do you not wifh to find arguments against the law and gofpel of GoD; and if you do, are you not prejudiced judges against the truth ?-If prejudiced ought you not to fuspect yourfelves ?- Have you ever examined the fcriptures thoroughly, to know whether its dóctrines and duties are reafonable ?--- Are not those perfons who are tempting you, and on whofe profeffed fentiments, you are building your own opinions and your eafe, unworthy to be trufted in the immortal concerns of your foul ?- Are not fome of them very ignorant, vain, affuming, full of words without knowledge; and are not others of them immoral; and are not all of them perfons in whofe hands, you would not truft your worldly intereft, without a check on their conduct? If fo, is it not unwife in you to be influenced by their opinions, in a cafe of fuch infinite importance, as the obtainment or loss of eternal happiness? When you have thought danger approaching, did you not feel the need of a gospel and of a Saviour to make your appearance before GoD fafe? Do you not fometimes feel guilty even for your doubts; and are not these doubts the greatest, when such indulgence of appetite, as you know to be wrong and dangerous to fociety, is most prevalent in your conduct ?- Do you not find the duties of life, which all men allow to be fit, are most eafily performed ; and that temptations are most eafily refifted, when the revealed commandments of GOD appear most real to you?-If GOD be our creator, he can give us the best instruction ; and as he dwells in the praifes of eternity, must be able to teach us the attainment of its bleffednefs; and have you by prayer afked his direction, that he would enlighten and fit you for the greatest good? If you have ever prayed, when were your doubts the greatest, either after you had looked to heaven for direction, or in the total neglect of duty? Have you ever found in your approaches to infidelity, fuch real peace of mind as you wished to obtain? If God were now to place you on the bed of death, could you fay I depart peacefully? Could you forget your fins, and coming boldly into his prefence, demand his mercy? Or, if you should thus do, is he under obligation to hear, and grant your request ?

BEFORE you reject the word of revelation, go into retirement, lay the holy fcriptures before you, and lift your eyes for direction to him who created and now preferves you, and anfwer to your own confcience the queftions I have propofed. Do it in folemn remembrance that GoD cannot be deceived, and that the confequences of your acting will be forever borne by yourfelf. I am certain, that, in this courfe, you cannot call the duties of religion unreafonable. You will find yourfelf to be both ignorant and guilty, and in need of the gofpel falvation. May we all be enlightened unto eternal life. AMEN.

SERMON XVII.

Christian refignation.

PSALM Xlvi. 10.

BE still, and know that I am GoD.

THE text leads us to confider the nature, duty and effects of chriftian refignation. The whole Pfalm is remarkable. It is a defcription of holy confidence in GoD; an exhortation to continue trufting in him; and a prophecy of the defolations he fhould make in the earth, to prepare the way for that peaceful flate of the Meffiah's kingdom, which will fucceed the many ages of violence that have been in the world.

In the 10th verfe, the prophet calls on the church, Come, behold the works of the Lord, what defolations be bath made in the earth. In the next verfe he paffes on to defcribe a period, which is ftill future. He maketh wars to ceafe unto the end of the earth, he breaketh the bow and cutteth the fpear in funder, he burneth the chariot in the fire. Then follows the text. Be ftill and know that I am God;

I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

God ruleth in infinite and unfearchable wifdom. In the midft of darkness he is preparing for light, and in a way above the comprehension of men, is carrying on the scheme of infinite wifdom, fo that all will redound to his greateft glory and the beft good of his holy kingdom. It is creatures only, who are exposed to do evil ; it is GOD alone, who brings good out of evil. This truth is believed and felt by good minds. They learn it from the word of GOD; from their own experience; and from the infinite glory, which they fee in the GOD of their hope. In contemplation of this truth, the church, in the beginning of the Pfalm, is reprefented as faying, God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled ; though the mountains Shake with the swelling thereof. There is a river, the Arcams whereof [hall make glad the city of our GOD : the holy place of the tabernacles of the most high. God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved : God shall help her, and that right early. These expressions of confidence, in the goodness and fafety of the divine government, are uttered by the church in view of the defolations which GOD maketh in the earth. They are a ftrong defcription of confidence, in all-ordering wildom. The Lord is not to be trufted lefs in days of darknefs and violence, than he is in days of profperity. There is a command, to rejoice evermore, which is in force at all times ; and though every thing may look terrifying to human wifdom, a christian faith rifes from seeing the temper and actions of creatures, to a fight of divine wildom, by which the whole is controled. In GoD himfelf we find reafon to rejoice evermore, to be refigned, and ftill before him. This fingle truth, that GOD reigns, will in every fcene, enlighten and give comfort to a pious mind.

THE prefent is a period diffinguished by calamities on mankind, through the exercife and violence of their own outraging paffions. God is punishing men by their own fin, and there appears to be a preparation for much calamity to come. The word of the Lord is going through the earth, to flow his truth and holinefs. And though human wifdom cannot look to the end of the scene, nor see in every event what GoD is doing, nor determine the future times and feafons; a christian faith, directed by his word, beholds a divine hand. Faith fees the king of Zion, going forth conquering and to conquer, and preparing the way to fulfil his promife. The kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the faints of the most high, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall ferve and obey him. While many dark events are ufhering in the defired time, faith is still, knowing that the Lord is GOD, and doing all things right.

THE difpenfations of infinite wildom which affect great bodies of men are more confpicuous, and many fuffer or rejoice together; therefore, they are more noticed in the memorials of paft ages. But the fame wife and holy GoD is acting in the daily events of time, which are confined in their influence, to the condition of families and individuals. Here alfo, faith and refignation are neceffary for the peace of men. There are fo many pains, difappointments, and overturnings, that it is fearce poffible to go forward a fingle day with peace, unlefs we know that the Lord is God and are still before him. Refignation, flowing from a belief of GOD's infinite wildom and holinefs, is a principal ingredient of christian peace. Refignation is the fortitude of a christian, for it is that, by which he overcomes and is happy. Refignation, even if we judge on worldly principles, is the honor of a christian; for it needs more firmnefs and felf-command to be refigned, than it does to complain. Refignation is the duty of a chriftian; for infinite wildom hath a right to direct in all cafes whatever. Refignation is neceffary for all mankind. Many evils must be borne. Frailty is attached to our perfons, our properties, and the condition of our existence, and those who are most fuccessful in life, must endure many difagreeable things. There are pains and forrows due to the nature of man in this world, which his power cannot overcome nor his skill evade. The christian, who hath a promife of GOD, that all things shall work for his good hath no promife to escape them; and the divine help which he is encouraged to feek, is patience and refignation to bear. He must have pain; perhaps, poverty and blasted expectation in his offspring and his interest; the calumny and perfecution of enemies; an endless variety of trials from the fin of others, his own fin, and the frailty of every furrounding object; the more in number and richness his bleffings are, the more capable they become of bitterly afflicting him by the lofs; and he must finally part with the whole, that is defirable in this world. Through this path of life the good man must walk.

THE covenant of grace gives him no encouragement of exemption from these trials; so far from this that it faith, I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Neverthèlefs, my loving kindnefs will I not utterly take from him, nor fuffer my faithfulnefs to fail. If ye endure chaftening, God dealeth with you as fons: For what fon is he whom the Father chafteneth not? To thofe who forget God, afflictions are neceffary to teach them the end of fin. To thofe, who have an intereft in the covenant of grace, they are a covenanted portion, for their purifying and the trial of their faith. In each of thefe difpenfations God is wife and holy; and all men, on one principle or another mult expect them. Let refignation or stillnefs before God, be therefore fought, as a temper neceffary for the happinefs of man in this world.

Serm. XVII. Christian resignation.

To illustrate the nature, duty, and effects of refignation, the following things shall be confidered.

I. WHAT is defigned in the text, by knowing that the Lord is GOD.

II. THE reafons of christian refignation.

III. THE bleffed effects which follow a refigned temper.

IV. To defcribe certain kinds of refignation, which may be found in an unholy ftate, and miftaken for true grace.

I. WHAT is defigned in the text, by knowing that the Lord is God.

THERE are many truths, which men by their actions do not appear to know. They act as if ignorant, or fully determined to treat them with no regard. We often speak of perfons, as being ignorant of truth and duty, when they act, in all respects, as if they did not know. Although none are abfolutely ignorant of the being of a GoD, for all must have heard this glorious truth; there are many, who act as they would do, if they supposed there were none. The truth is difagreeable; they are willing to be ignorant; they drive the fubject from their meditations; and are many times fo fuccessful as not to be molefted by the remembrance. The fool hath faid in his heart there is no Gop. This is directly oppofed to knowing that the Lord is Gop, which implies,

Ift. A BELIEF and practical apprehension of his being and glorious attributes; of his prefence and constant efficiency; that he is near and not afar off; that in him we live and move and have our being. For the exercise of any christian grace we must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently feek him. An ignorance of GoD's being and presence, is a foundation for all impiety. It is a principal cause of the crimes, with which a finful life is filled; for if there were a just apprehension of him, they would be restrained, although the heart is not right with him. Hence, we find in the holy word, fuch pains taken to imprefs our minds with the being of GoD; that he lives, that he acts, that he is every where prefent, that we are in his hand, that we are ever near him, and fubject to his fovereign will. A fenfe of this truth, is the beginning of all ferious confideration in finners; and the quickening of all gracious affection in chriftians. Whoever is still before GoD must know that he is, and be filled with an apprehension of the reality, the glory, fulness and eternity of his being. It may justly be feared that many good people, fuffer the world fo far to intrude and drive an apprehension of GoD from their minds, as to prevent refignation. They are impatient, are fretful with the things taking place around them, not recollecting that GOD is here; and thus great fin is committed. In fuch cafes, it is not a fufficient excufe, that the impatience is not pointed immediately against GoD; for the probable reafon it is not, is becaufe he is out of fight. Impatience with a condition, though there be not a prefent recollection, that it is ordered by the Almighty; is still a fin against him. The creature ought to fee and adore him in every thing.

2dly. IN knowing the Lord to be GoD, is implied an apprehension of his all-directing providence. As he made, fo he supports.

THE power which acted in creating, acts continually in a providential government. It feems to us, as though the fight would be wonderful, to ftand and fee a world of creatures rifing into exiftence by the creating will ; but fetting afide the novelty of the fcene, it is as wonderful, to behold a world of creatures continue existing, upheld, moved, acted upon, and deftined to their end, by the providential efficiency of the Almighty. The existence which we feel, and the things which we fee, are effects of a power now acting. He upholds the laws of nature. All things, from the upholding of a world, to the falling of a hair, are the present work of Gon. This constant acting of Deity is what we call providence. It is universal, taking in the whole; and it is particular, extending to the most minute events. It is a divine action, here and every where prefent. There is no power or wildom, foreign to himfelf and the effects of his will, by which he is influenced.

THIS apprehension of divine providence, will make every good mind very joyful, and at the fame time, very folemn. A providence of this kind is effential to GODHEAD, and unlefs we have fuch apprehensions of him, we do not know him as GOD. Doubtlefs an unholy mind will object against this constant fense of providential action, and confider it as a caufe of unhappinefs; but unholy minds do not know the Lord, as GoD. Nothing ought to be called chriftian refignation, which doth not thus realize a fupreme and alldirecting providence.

3dly. Knowing the Lord to be God, includes a full conviction of his perfect wildom and goodnefs in governing.

MANY who believe there is a GoD, and a fupreme providence, do not appear to have a conviction of his wildom, in his own nature and in all his works. They do not confider perfect wildom and goodnels to be fo effential and neceffary to GODHEAD as infinite power. In this cafe, they are judging from the darkness of depravity, and do not by their opinion honor him as Gop. There may be apathy; there may be the fubmiffion of neceffity; there may be the fubmiffion of a felfish heart, willing GOD should reign for its own benefit; but there cannot be holy refignation, without a belief of infinite wildom and goodnefs in the divine government. Christian refignation, is an exercife of a holy heart, directed by a rational understanding; and reason can never approve a fovereign action, which is not wife and good. The Gons of the heathen are vanity and a lie; fo may be the God of many in chriftian lands. Those who have christian means of information, may be refigned through falle apprehensions of the divine character, of his wifdom and the nature of his government, and thus their fervice be neither rational nor holy. A full conviction of divine wifdom and goodnefs in his government is neceffary for knowing the Lord to be Gon, and for a holy fubmiffion.

II. I AM to defcribe the reafons of christian refignation.

Serm. XVII. Christian resignation.

THE exhortation, be ftill and know that I am GOD, relates to the ftate of the heart or will, in view of divine fovereignty ordering all events which take place. Reference is particularly had, to the affliction difpenfed in divine judgment; for it immediately follows a call to behold the defolations, which GOD makes in the earth, as a preparation for his own peaceful kingdom. Being ftill before GOD means a quiet fubmiffion to his will, and all the works of his providence. A heart acquiefcing in the purpofes of his government, and the means by which they are executed.

A CHRISTIAN is conformed to the divine character, and having the fame objects of love and defire, is inclined to acquiefce by the fame reafons which move God to decree and execute.

IN all cafes, where the reafons of infinite wifdom are known, they become reafons for refignation. The glory brought to GoD by a difplay of his holinefs; the advancement of his kingdom; the fuppreffion or punifhment of fin, are, in particular cafes, motives to divine action, and they are reafons for chriftian refignation.

FURTHER, the infinite wildom and holinels of GDO, is, in all cales, a fufficient reason for men to be refigned to his government. He cannot do wrong; he cannot act unwifely; cannot defire any thing that is unfit, or choose improper means to execute a good end. Infinite wisdom and goodnels, enable him to devise and execute in the best manner; fo that his whole government is right and glorious. This is the great reason for christian refignation, and is fufficient at all times, and under all events.

It is defirable, if GOD permit, to know the reafons of his government, and we may humbly fearch to find them out ; but if they remain hid, it is, notwithftanding, our duty to be refigned. A knowledge of his infinite and holy wifdom is fufficient caufe to rejoice and be ftill.—This caufe for refignation is as fufficient in days of trial, as it is in times of profperity; for GoD is wife in both. In view of his infinite perfection, and in a love of his government and the kingdom he is forming by the beft means, a holy mind under trials will fay; though he flay me, I will truft in him and be patient; although the fig-tree fhall not bloffom, I will rejoice; although I am not perfonally benefitted, he will be glorious and his kingdom be made happy, I will therefore refignedly fay, his will be done.

It is not difficult to fee, that these reasons for refignation may exist and operate in times of the deepest perfonal trials. Indeed, it is in such times, we have the best opportunity for examining the fincerity of our submission. One end of God's covenant faithfulness in fending afflictions, is, thus to affiss his people in examining their own fincerity, that their joy in his grace may be very great.

III. I WILL next describe some benefits of a refigned temper.

ALTHO' our refignation is due to the perfection of the Lord and of his government, and this is the great reafon which influences a holy mind; we ought alfo to remember its benefits, which are great to the poffeffor.

1. RESIGNATION will make us happy in GOD himfelf. Our relation to GOD and dependence upon him are natural and neceffary. They ever have been and must ever remain; nor can we in any fituation, nor for any moment detach ourfelves from the confequences of his universal action. His will which acts is uniform and unchangeable. Whatever our belief may be of his infinite perfection, and however clear our rational conviction; unless our hearts are refigned to his character and providence we cannot be happy in him. His counteracting will and works, will foon raife in our perverse hearts, an enmity against his very existence. Every prospect of his being, will be attended with wretchednefs, and the growing mifery of oppofition. As we are fituated under the divine government, nothing but refignation can make us happy in GOD himfelf. If refigned, in every difplay of himfelf, he will appear to us most excellent and glorious; we shall constantly rejoice in his infinite perfection; and become more happy in our knowledge and union to him.

2dly. Resignation will make us happy in the reality and truth of a divine providence. According as the flate of the heart varies, the doctrine of a supreme providence is a source of the most fensible pleasure or pain. A mind in oppofition to the general principles of providence, must be unhappy in a knowledge of its reality. His governing agency will be dreaded, through a fuspicion that his defigns are unfriendly, and will end, either in direct punishment or a denial of defired enjoyments. Holy refignation produces the reverle of this. The universal providence of GOD is a pleafing fubject for meditation. Refigned to the principles and certainty of divine government, the mind can look on every fcene with composure, and comfort itself by reflecting; though all things appear dark and confused, there is wildom, power and goodnels ordering the whole. All will be right. I have confidence in this direction. Though it be impoffible for me to fee the wifdom of many events, or how my own perfonal trials will turn to good; they are the ordering of a wife GoD, and must be right.— Thus the refigned christian is made happy by his certain knowledge of GoD's providence, for when every event appears dark and threatening, and his own weakness great; he casts himself on the light of infinite wisdom and the strength of infinite power.

3dly. Hence it appears that refignation is the true balm for all the wounds given by an afflicting world; yea more, it is a victory over the world. It is an exercise of the new born heart, and a fruit of that faith, of which the apoftle fays, For what soever is born of GOD overcometh the world : and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith .--- Under the reviling of enemies, it can fay; Let them curse, because the Lord hath bid them do it. Under actual fuffering, it can obey the command, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. It can pray under the trials of providence. If it be poffible, let this cup pass from me : nevertheles, not as I will, but as thou wilt.-For the inftruments of affliction, however wicked in their conduct, it can pray. Father forgive them; for they know not what they do. Under bereavement of friends, it can fay. The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away, bleffed be the name of the Lord. When outward comforts of the world fail it can rejoice. For though there be no berd in the stall, I will joy in the GOD of my falvation. The mind thus fortified, is placed above the power of man and the world. Its peace is founded on the rock of ages. It can fee the glory of GoD, when his way is in darkness and the deep waters. It can kiss the rod, and the hand which appointeth it; and fay, it is good for me that I am afflicted, and the government which doth this is the government of my choice. The wifdom of GoD is fo perfect I can wifh no change in his plan, or its execution. If I am pained, let me be pained, for the honor of GoD requires it. This refigned foul, in the clofing of the earthly fcene triumphs, O death where is thy fting, O grave where is thy victory.

Is not this a victory over the world, over fin and death? To be happy in duty is to conquer; and this is the only victory a creature can have. In thefefentiments, a humble chriftian, tho' moft fenfible of his own weaknefs, can rejoice becaufe the Lord reigneth. When the world of unbelieving finners, behold a chriftian who feels thefe things; let them reverence the power of fovereign and fanctifying grace. Let them know that the effectual, fervent prayer of this difciple avails much. Let them here fee the ftrength of GoD, made perfect in the weaknefs of a creature; and infinite truth fulfilling the promife, Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

4. CHRISTIAN refignation will make duty eafy to the people of God.

THE chriftian law of holinefs is called the perfect law of liberty. The moft glorious and excellent of all freedom, is that which difpofes us to follow truth and duty. If CHRIST fhall make us free; if we be free in doing our duty; if we be delivered from the reigning power of fin, this is being free indeed. This freedom is felt in refignation and makes all duty eafy, to the obedient believer. Unholy perfons never obey in an evangelical fenfe, and their legal attempts to obey are a flavery of the mind, between a love of fin, and the terrors of the law and an accufing confcience.

Christian resignation. Serm. XVII.

CHRISTIAN refignation makes duty eafy and pleafing. Experience gives conviction, that there is, in most cafes, a fensible benefit in obeying. But if there be no fensible and perfonal benefit from obedience, refignation can take up the crofs and follow the commands of CHRIST in a dark way. It can fay there is comfort enough in duty, from the fingle confideration, that GoD hath commanded and CHRIST is honored. Thefe are among the happy effects of that refigned temper, which CHRIST commanded his people. When they do their duty beft, they are most happy ; and it is not in the power of man to deftroy their peace.

IV. I AM, next, to defcribe certain kinds of refignation, which may be found in an unholy ftate of the heart, and mistaken for true grace.

To all, who are deceived in their own flate, this is the most interesting part of the subject; and it is probable that not a few are in this cafe. Refignation is so plainly a christian grace, that no perfon of any confideration, will dare think himself fase, without supposing he possible the himself state, without supposing he possible the hany, both live and die quietly, by thinking they are refigned; at the fame time, there is perhaps no grace, concerning which men are more liable to be deceived. Whatever prevents a fenfible refissance and enmity to the divine government, may be missible for refignation; and this may be prevented by the most felfissh confiderations, which have in them, nothing of holines, or a love of God for what he is, or approbation of the principles by which he governs.

1. A WANT of feeling, a loss of all fense of moral obligation, may be mistaken for a refigned temper.

Serm. XVII. Christian resignation.

THIS is the cafe with many, who have long given themfelves up to fenfuality, to a carelefs and licentious life, and a neglect of those divine institutions, which are defigned to promote ferioufnefs. True religion increases all the senfibilities of the foul, and at the fame time, makes men fubmiffive to a law, by which they may be happily exercifed. The apostle, in enumerating the effects of original depravity, adds with other things, without natural affection. The original corruption of human nature, makes men hard hearted, and stupid. This is first discovered in their feeling towards others, and afterwards towards themfelves. Even while a finful pride and felf-love are gaining ftrength, there is a ftupidity concerning their own future well-being. When confcience is feared, their apprehenfions concerning futurity and their future appearance before GOD are feared alfo. If they can have finful indulgencies, for the prefent time, they are fwallowed up in thefe, and are ready to fay, Soul, take thine eafe, eat, drink and be merry. This apathy concerning another world, is, fometimes, ftrangely continued, through those fcenes of pain, which commonly precede death; and the unhappy foul mistakes the bands of fecurity, for a pious refignation. These perfons are fleeping the fleep of death, for evil is near them, and they cannot be made fenfible. The furprize of a change will be great, and the tormenting powers of a condemning confcience will break on them when no refiftance can be made.

2dly. I MUST next mention the refignation of felfifunefs.

ent time, expose many to be deceived by the refignation of felf-love. They accede to the truth, that GOD is good ; and then draw the unfcrip. tural consequence, if GOD be good we are safeall in the end will be best for us .--- Though we now fuffer pain, God in the end will make us more happy, and in fome future time, pay to us the debt of happiness, which we are purchasing by present afflictions. Thus they are refigned to prefent evils on the principle ; that GoD will refund to them, in fome after time, for what they now endure. They overlook justice. They have no regard to their demerits. They make their own particular benefit and not the general good, a rule for determining the wifdom and equity of providence. They bear pain now, without murmuring, to be repaid hereafter. This may be the state of the mind, and there is no telling how far it may be carried, without any holinefs.

MEN have a natural conviction, that they ought to be refigned. They are often told that GOD is infinitely good. If to thefe, they can join a belief, it will in the end be best for them to endure; they may meet the loffes of a difappointing life and the common terrors of a natural death, without any great difcomposure. Especially, they may do this, when they find an allcontroling neceffity which cannot be overcome. In this way, the unholy may be refigned, and are often deceived. They are refigned, because they suppose GOD is on their fide, and doing better for them by his wifdom, than they can do for themfelves. In this refignation, there is nothing different from the labor and fatigue of an inordinate worldling, which he chooses for himfelf one year, that he may be more happy, through many years, which he fuppofes are to fucceed.

To try this refignation let the fcheme of infinite truth and wildom be brought into view. Let it be allowed, that GOD hath infinite wifdom and goodnefs; but that thefe do not require him to make every one most happy in the end. Let demerit be stated. Let there be given a defcription of the glory and good, which will redound to GOD and his kingdom, by treating fome finners according to their demerits. Let God's right to feek his own glory, be established as a governing maxim of the divine government, and this fubmiffion will be gone. In the place of refignation, there will be cavils against the divine administration, and the rebelling heart will fhow itfelf. The divine government will be called hard and unreafonable, and the fcriptures which propound thefe doctrines will be rejected.

OF all the fources of deception, this, at the prefent time, is one of the moft common. It hence becomes an incumbent duty, on all the friends of truth and the fouls of men, to explain and vindicate the nature of holinefs, as confifting in a difinterested love and obedience to GoD. So long as men serve GoD, are obedient and refigned to him, for their own sake alone; it is not true religion, and those may do it, who have not a fingle heavenly ingredient in their character.

THERE is in the most unholy men a natural conviction of their dependence. The daily pains, wants and difappointments of life force them to believe what they do not choose. Through a long and unfuccessful resistance they despair of fucceeding against God. A fuppofed impoffibilty, deftroys the vigor of define, and makes them think they do not wish that, which they would feize with the utmost avidity, if the thing were known to be possible. Hence comes the refignation of necessity, of which many make a merit to themsfelves in their lives, and a hope in their death.

WHEN their earthly profpects are blafted, either in ambition or intereft, they renounce the world becaufe they cannot have it. If thofe, who think they feel fubmiflion, in fuch cafes, would faithfully examine their hearts, they would find a lurking fufpicion of partiality in the divine government; or the first fpringing of enmity against more fortunate adventurers in the change of the world. By this they might know their own infincerity, and detect a heart, which is deceitful above all things.

WHEN their friends are laid in darknefs, the heart quarrels with GOD, until it is found, that a contending will cannot raife the dead. Then, fome other object of idolatrous affection is found. The heart, being weaned from its old attachment by a new one, becomes calm, the pain ceafes, and this is called chriftian refignation.

WHEN death approaches the ftruggle is more fevere; but even here, the delufion may prevail. All the aid of reafon and philofophy is called in, and perhaps the phyfician's opiate gives an unnatural eafe to the paroxifm of pain in the dying body and an inebriated profpect of eternity, from which many quiet death-beds have come. The decay is found to be irrefiftible. Both art and wifhes are baffled. The foul loaths its own difeafed habitation, and from the inquietude natural to men, is ready to wifh a change of ftate. The impotence of the world to help, weans the mind from it. The appetites are laid dead through the approaching death of the body. The enfeebled animal makes the mind a babe, and to the inquiry of anxious friends it is anfwered, Iam refigned. But whether this be a holy refignation; whether there be a love and fubmiffion to GoD for what he is, and the wifdom of his government, is a folemn queftion which eternity and an appearance before his all-fearching bar, will anfwer beft.

It is hard to wound the feelings of a deathbed. Nothing, but a deep and an uncommon fenfe of the worth of fouls, will enable any one to do it. Let not the healthy and the living defer the queftion of the fincerity of their own refignation, until that precarious moment. How expofed it is to a delufion ! How unable the mind is, then to judge ! How hard for furrounding friends, to be the meffengers of alarm ! How hard for the watchman in Zion, at this untimely moment, to terrify the dying, and fill the hearts of mourners, with many forrows !

IF wife, we fhall often examine the flate of our own hearts, previous to the approach of death. Now we have opportunity, inftruction, and a judgment unimpaired by the weaknefs of the body. Whether we have a chriftian refignation, and are prepared for another world, is a queftion which ought to be most folemnly and rationally determined, before the hour of bidding a hafty farewel to the world. In examining the fincerity of our fouls, let us be guarded againft that felfifhnefs of the human heart which is its fin. A reverence and love of divine perfection in his nature and government, is the caufe of a holy refignation. May we, through the grace of GOD, experience this and be happy. AMEN.

SERMON XVIII.

On the evidence of forgiveness.

JAMES II. 18.

-I wILL show thee my faith by my works.

THERE are two facred passes, written by the apostles Paul and James, which may appear contradictory, if we do not attend to the very different subjects they were confidering.

PAUL faith, Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

JAMES faith, Ye fee then how that by works a man is justified; and not by faith only.

THE two apoftles are explaining very different points of chriftian doctrine. In feveral chapters, Paul explains and proves the doctrine of our juftification to eternal life, by the free grace of GOD, through the righteoufnels of JESUS CHRIST. Juftification is an act of free and fovereign grace, forgiving fin and accepting the guilty to eternal life. It is a judicial act or determination of GOD, acquitting the tranfgreffor from punifhment, and decreeing to him the forgivenels of fin and eternal bleffedness. The fuffering and obedience of CHRIST, are the righteousness, on account of which, unworthy finners are forgiven and have a promife of most glorious redemption. This righteoufnefs is the only meritorious ground of justi-fication. Sinners can do nothing to purchase forgiveness. Perfect holiness, if it be found in a creature, is no more than his prefent duty; fo that if there be any atonement or meritorious caufe of forgiveness, it must be from without himfelf. One fin, if it were to be followed by no more, would require an infinite mediator to fave. The most pure and fanctified christian hath as much need of a redeemer and of fovereign mercy, as the most guilty finner. Although there may be more fins to forgive, in one cafe, than in the other; both need the fovereign grace of God, through his Son CHRIST JESUS. The ftated way, of receiving juftification or the benefits of free grace through CHRIST, is by faith. It is not required that we purchase, for this is imposfible. We are required to receive, as a free gift, through the righteoufness of CHRIST, which is of infinite value. Receiving or choofing God, who offers himfelf and his grace, in this way; and receiving CHRIST and his gofpel with the law of holinels contained in it, is a laving faith. It is also called a justifying faith. In this fense, the apostle Paul faid, Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Faith does not merit, but only receives a falvation merited by CHRIST; and in this fenfe it is called a justifying faith. In this fense we are justified by faith, and not by any deeds of obedience which we can render.

WHEN James fays, Ye fee then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only, he is explaining another doctrine. He is defcribing, not the manner of our justification by GOD; but the evidence that we are justified, or that our faith is a fincere one. God hath promifed to justify all who have faith. For our comfort, it is neceffary we should have evidence, that we are accepted according to promife; and our works are the only evidence, which the nature of the cafe admits, for the fincerity of our faith. Paul was describing the manner of our personal justification by God. James is defcribing the justification or proof that our faith is fincere, or in other words, the proper evidence to ourfelves and others that we are forgiven, and have a right thro' the mercy of GOD to eternal life. That this is the meaning of James is evident by attending to the context from verfe 14 to 20. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man fay he hath faith, and have not works ? Can faith fave him? If a brother or fister be naked, and destitute of daily food ; and one of you fay unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit ? Even fo faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may fay, thou hast faith, and I have works : shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Thou believest there is one GOD: thou doest well : the devils alfo believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man ! that faith without works is dead ?

MEN are difpofed to think well of their own ftate, and often fuppofe it to be good, without any reafon. They may, on falfe grounds, or without any grounds at all, fuppofe they have faith, and are forgiven. There is faith of a kind which is not juftifying, as in the inftance of the fallen fpirits. This kind of faith, will be no more effectual in us, than it is in them. It is therefore prudent to bring our faith to a trial, and fee if there be any evidence which will prove or juftify its fincerity. If there be, we may hope; if there be not, it is a falle and unholy faith, and of no more efficacy to falvation, than empty words are to clothe and feed the naked and the hungry.

WORKS, in the large latitude, which the word must be here understood, are the only evidence that can justify or prove the holy fincerity of our faith, to ourfelves and to our brethren. It is conceived, that works, mean the whole of a holy temper and practice. The christian fanctification is a new heart, exercifed in an affemblage of holy affections and graces, and terminating in a visible obedience to the whole law. Holy exercifes can never be feparated, in fuch a manner, that one may exift, where there is a total want of all others. Repentance will accompany a love of GoD. A love of GoD will be followed by a love of the brethren. If our faith be holy it will be joined with other holy exercifes, and a general obedience in heart and life. Although every chriftian grace hath a known moral nature, by which it is effentially different from fin; yet if we fuppofe ourfelves to poffels it and it be not accompanied with other graces, there is reafon to fear we are deceived. It is more probable we are deceived, than it is that one holy exercise exists alone. Alfo, however firmly we may believe the fincerity of our hearts, it is more probable we are deceived, than it can be that a fincere and holy heart will produce a very wicked life. In trying our faith, we must therefore, for evidence, have recourfe to our whole temper and practice ; to our works, in the large fense, the word has been defined.

In the judgment we make of the flate of others, we mult, for evidence, have recourfe to every thing either in their words or actions, which explains the moral flate of their hearts, and is defcriptive either of their conformity or want of conformity to GoD and his kingdom. All who have faith are forgiven. By this train of thought we are therefore brought to the following point.

To confider the evidence of faith, or in other words, to confider the evidence of a gracious forgiveness and acceptance by God. I will divide the subject into two inquiries.

I. WHAT is the evidence, on which we ought to judge our neighbour to be forgiven and accepted by God?

II. On what evidence may we judge ourfelves to be forgiven ?

I. WHAT is the evidence, on which we ought ... to judge our neighbour to be accepted by GoD.

As GoD hath committed our eternal interefts, fpecially to our own care, it is a matter of much the greateft moment, that we judge rightly of ourfelves, and here our principal labor fhould be directed. Still, there are cafes, in which we are called to judge of the fpiritual flate of other men. It is neceffary for our chriftian communion with them; for determining the propriety of committing into their hands the offices in the church of CHRIST; and for treating them in a manner the beft calculated for their falvation, for their awakening, if they be unfanctified, and for their edification and comfort in the faith, if they be the true people of GoD. ALL, whofe faith is right, are created in CHRIST JESUS unto good works. They have, from his fulnefs, received grace for grace, that is, fome degree of moral virtue conformable to all the moral perfections of the divine character. There is a beginning fanctification of the whole heart, the beginning of experimental grace and the duties of a holy life. In feeking evidence of other mens fincerity, the inquiry is not to be confined to their faith or any other particular grace or action ; but extended to the whole moral character, both practice and the inward flate of the héart, fo far as the heart can be evidenced to our understanding and entitled to the credit of others. The heart of man is expressed to others by an infinite variety of words, actions, and their whole appearance in fociety. Actions may fo effectually contradict words, as to deftroy their credit; and where fome capital actions of life are irreprovable, there may be many things expressive of levity and an infincere heart. In all cafes, the following things, are neceffary evidence of a holy heart and true faith.

I. A PROFESSED belief of the doctrines of grace and holinefs, as they are revealed to us in the word of GOD.

But few will deny this, who really believe the fcriptures, and fuppofe there is any thing in religion, and any eternal confequences depending on our prefent conduct. There may be perfons in chriftian lands, who really are of no religious faith. Thefe, either for the fake of reputation or fome worldly and felfifh caufe, may choofe to be thought of the chriftian faith. As they wifh to have their own chriftianity received without evidence, they may be willing to extend the fame liberality to others. Travelling together in the road to infidelity, yea, even with fouls under their guidance, they may agree to difagree, in the most holy truths of revelation. These perfons betray their want of gofpel fincerity, by avowing, that articles of faith and profession are of no importance ; though it be a most certain truth, that mens practice, in the fight of GoD, will be according to their faith.

ALL, who are willing to have the gofpel practice; all who love the fouls of others; all who know the pleafure of holy communion in the faith of CHRIST's gofpel; all who believe that religion is a moral principle of the heart; all who have only the low degree of christian understanding, which perceives the connexion between doctrinal belief and practice, will fee a perfonal profession of christian doctrines to be necessary evidence of a holy heart and of true faith.

IT is evident, by reading the fcriptures of CHRIST and his apostles, that we are required to fhow great boldnefs in the faith, and even to give up our lives in defence of it. But how can this be, if a perfonal profession of faith be not required from us? It would have been a strange doctrine to the apostles and primitive martyrs, to hear it faid, by men who still meant to be called christians, that articles of faith were of little importance, if a man's life be civil. They did not fo learn CHRIST and his gospel. On these prin-ciples, they might, have been good apostles; and at the fame time have faved their lives in the courts of heathen lawgivers and judges. The law of Jesus requires christians, not only to profefs, but to abide in their faith, even to death; and those who disobey in this requirement do not give christian evidence that they have faith unto forgiveness and eternal life.

FURTHER, every fincere christian loves the law of GOD and the doctrines of the gofpel. He fees in them a beauty and glory, which charm his heart. He is made happy in reading and obeying them; and it is impossible he should hide this happiness from others. So far from this, it will be his daily endeavour, in a public and humble manner to declare his faith. He will efteem it his duty, thus to honor GOD; and thus to call his unhappy fellowmen, to the falvation of peace and holinefs. Although we have no right to prefcribe the faith of others, benevolence will dispose every true disciple of CHRIST, to teach mankind the doctrines and duties of that gofpel, by which he has found comfort, and a deliverance from the wrath, that is to come on the una godly.

2dly. ANOTHER evidence of a true faith, which we have right to require from other men, before we receive them as our christian brethren, is a visible obedience to the moral law.

THE moral law is the law of a chriftian temper and practice. Grace without a holy practice exifts no where, except in the imagination of guilty men, and is no where defcribed in the chriftian fcriptures. Mofes and CHRIST gave the fame law of holinefs, for the hearts and vifible practice of men. CHRIST fays of the law; I am not come to deftroy, but to fulfil. In another place, For had ye believed Mofes, ye would have believed me. In refpect of holinefs, both of heart and life, the gofpel and the law command the fame things. The gofpel of free grace and forgivenefs, faves men by creating in them a fpirit of love and obedience to the law; and though this obedience hath no merit, it is the preparation for heaven, and the only evidence of a gracious forgivenefs. Faith receives the justifying rightcoulnels of CHRIST; and conformity to the law in heart and in visible works of holines is the evidence of a right faith. Hence it appears, that visible morality, is a necessary evidence of true faith in JESUS CHRIST. Faith is an exercife of a holy heart; and a holy heart will always fhow itself in a pure practice, in a visible observance of the moral law, and of fpecial gospel institutions. We therefore find, all moral duties to GoD and man commanded in the gospel; and all immoralities, are confidered as fufficient evidence, against christian fincerity. A holy life; a pure practice ; actions denoting reverence and a love of Gor; justice and mercy to men; personal purity and fanctification; and a dedication of all our active powers to the glory of GoD and the good of mankind, both for time and eternity. are enumerated as the proper life of christians, and the only evidence of their fincerity. There are the most express laws, enjoining christians to reject from their communion and the fellowship of their holy body, all, who by their practice, do not appear to love the holy commandments of IESUS CHRIST. The unjust, the dishonest, the profane, the impure of every description, the difturbers of fociety by their wilful injury of mens reputation and interefts, the intemperate deftroyers of their own ability to do good, the neglectors of God and his inftitutions, and those who by any wilful crime injure fociety and their neighbour, can give no evidence they are chriftians indeed. The law of CHRIST confiders all fuch, as infincere perfons, until by reformation, they give evidence of their repentance and faith.

3dly. THERE may be what is commonly called a moral life, while the heart is unholy. A conviction by experience, that there is no other way of fafety in the fociety of the world, may influence men to a moral life, in this fenfe of morality. They may be tender of other mens reputation, merely to preferve their own. They may be honeft in their dealings to engrofs a great worldly property to themfelves. They may join in the public worfhip of GoD, from a conviction that often meeting together harmonizes the paffions of men, which are naturally ferocious, and tends to preferve a civil government that protects their honor and their properties. All this is often done, where there is no love of GoD's holinefs—no fenfe of moral obligation.

THE question arifes, is that, which is commonly called a moral life, sufficient evidence of forgiveness and of being a christian indeed?

CHRIST tells us, Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. The fruits of a good and holy heart are proper evidence of fincerity and forgivenefs. And what are these fruits? The description, a moral life, may be extended to include every thing expressive of the heart; but it is not commonly thus used. A supreme love of GOD and all holy objects is the christian fincerity to which forgiveness is promised, and this will always express itself, in ways beyond what is commonly meant by a moral life. A man may treat his neighbour morally, while it is very apparent that he does not love him, and delight in his profperity. All mankind fee the difference between formal complaifance, and the respect of fervent love; between formal obedience, and a fincere one; between an action delightful in itfelf, and one that is done to ferve another purpose and in which the heart takes no pleafure. There are innumerable cafes in which the heart is most perfectly expressed, by things which cannot be defcribed, and duties which can never be reduced to a written rule. The fenfibilities of the heart appear in ways which words cannot picture. They are conceived, they are felt, but never defcribed in language. We always expect to find this evidence of fincerity, in forming the friendships of the world; and a want of it at once excites our distruct.

CHRISTIAN fincerity requires an evidence which rifes above formality. If men feel a fupreme love of God, of his character and government, of his law and doctrines; there will be a natural expression of this love. They will be ready to express, in language which will be intelligible to all who have felt the fame, their happinefs in beholding and ferving God. Their communion will be fweet in frequent conversation, instruction, advice and prayer to the glorious object of their common adoration; and the whole scene of their christian connection and obedience will be raifed above formality. By a mutual engagedness to glorify GoD, to advance the kingdom of CHRIST, and fave the fouls of others, they will give evidence of their own fincerity and faith-that the glory of God is near their hearts -and that they think and act to promote it. Their thoughts will appear to be on the things of GOD and another world. This will banish that frivolous difcourfe and those foolish actions, in which many are conftantly engaged, thereby proving that they never think of their own folemn destination, and the account they have to give before God. On the evidence which hath been mentioned, the communion of CHRIST'S people in this world ought to be founded; and no part of it can be omitted, without fubflituting the form without the power of godlinefs. True Rr obedience is of the heart. Whatever expresses this, defcribes the man as he will be finally judged by the christian law. Those who are afraid to have the heart fearched, think differently from JESUS CHRIST. They discover infincerity, a want of conformity to GOD, and of preparation for the day when he shall judge the secrets of men by JESUS CHRIST.

• WHAT is the benefit of formality? Hath it any benefits in the earthly church? Is there any advantage in allowing, that formal perfons are fincere. To them, it can be of no eventual advantage, for it only tends to continue them in a most dangerous flumber, from which they will fuddenly awake in an awful eternity. Humanity and chriftian love forbid this. To the caufe of CHRIST in the world, it can certainly be of no advantage. For hereby enemies of the truth gain an advantage, to corrupt both the doctrines and practice of the gospel; and the fecure, feeing the formality of their appearance, are led to conclude there is no fincerity in religion, and that all believers are deceitful perfons.

II. I AM to confider, on what evidence we may judge ourfelves to be forgiven ?

THIS is a most folemn point of inquiry; and who that realizes what it is to be happy or miferable forever, will not feel the weight of the question. If we misjudge concerning the fincerity of our brethren, though they may fuffer fome prefent difadvantages thereby, their eternal state is not endangered; through our misjudgment they will not fuffer; and omnifcience, which cannot err, will determine right. If we misjudge, in our own cafe, the loss is infinite. There is not another life of trial to correct the mistake. A false opinion cannot be pleaded in its own excuse. The lot for eternity is cast.

THE fincerity of our own faith, or evidence of our forgiveness must be derived from our works, in the large fenfe the word is underftood in this difcourfe. Although faith hath a determinate moral nature of its own, it is not fafe to conclude we have it ; unlefs we feel other gracious exercifes of a holy heart. It is always to be prefumed, that faith will be accompanied with a fenfible love of holy objects, repentance, refignation, patience, and evangelical affections. It must, likewise be presumed, that a true faith will make all who poffels it, conformed in their practice to the laws of CHRIST. They cannot believe without loving ; nor can they love without obferving his known commands. Sundry remarks will be made to affift in this examination.

· 1. To prove the fincerity of our faith, and that we are forgiven by GOD we must find in our hearts other gracious affections, which always accompany an evangelical faith. It is not credible, that we have received GOD and CHRIST by faith, if we do not love the effential and unchangeable perfections of the divine nature; fuch as his truth, justice, fovereignty and infinite holinefs. It is not credible that we have faith, without a delight in the doctrines of CHRIST .---Whoever receives CHRIST will receive his commandments and all those truths, which he came into the world to teach and died to magnify .---All the works of providence are conformable to divine rectitude, and harmonious both with the gofpel fcheme and the defigns of a most holy wifdom in redeeming ; if therefore, we have not refignation to the general fcheme of divine gov-ernment, and patience under particular allotments, it is evident that we have not the exercise of a faving faith. The habitual exercise of impatience proves the habitual want of faith.

IT would be eafy to exemplify the harmonious nature of a juffifying faith with all holy obedience of heart and vifible practice. Receiving GoD, is receiving him in his whole nature, law and government. Receiving CHRIST, is receiving him in all his mediatorial offices and requirements. All this is included in those christian works, by which we are to judge ourfelves accepted and forgiven of GoD.

FINDING the promise, He that believeth and is baptized, Shall be faved ; but he that believeth not shall be damned, men are very folicitous to establifh the validity of their own belief or faith. They fingle out this grace, and try to find evidence and convince themfelves that they have it. Having attained a perfuasion of their faith, they are at ease concerning their eternal well being. If they looked further into this all-concerning fubject, they would find that other graces and a holy practice are as neceffary in the christian as his faith ; alfo, that faith cannot be found alone. The heart which can believe; can alfo repent, mourn for fin, forfake fin, love the divine law and government, be refigned and patient, be devoted to the glory of God, have a most benevolent love of men and of fouls, and live in all holy conversation, godliness, temperance, weanedness from the world, prayerful, and in the practice of a heavenly conversation. Wilt thou know O vain man, that faith without works is dead. The devils believe and tremble ; but they are not holy.-They believe only doctrinally-their faith is their torment, and there is not in it any obedience.

its requirements. Although the christian finds himfelf condemned and flain by the law, his faith approves every one of its commandments as holy, just and good. When he receives CHRIST, he receives the law to be the rule of his future temper and actions. So far is he from animofity against the law, on account of its condemning fentence; that he fees this to be a mark of its excellence, and adores the divine government for being guided by fo good a commandment, which requires men to love the Lord with, all their heart, and all their strength and all their mind.

2. VISIBLE morality or a holy practice is required in christians; and without it we cannot have evidence of our own forgiveness.

MEN may fall into great and ftrange delufions. There have been many perfons of a most immoral life, who appeared to think their falvation fecure, from an apprehension of inward illumination and the grace of GOD reigning in their hearts. This is a most dangerous delusion, and is turning the grace of GOD into licentiousnes. There can be no forgiveness without a good heart. There may be a moral practice where the heart is not fanctified, for a practice vifibly right may arife from unholy motives; but an immoral practice never can come from a good heart. It is impoffible there fhould be a holy motive to a bad deed. Men may think their motives to be holy, and thence form a falle opinion of their bad actions ; but in all fuch cafes, the judgment is vitiated through a depravity of heart. An habitual bad practice proves a bad heart.

THOUGH the people of GoD are fanctified but in part and may do many bad actions; we have no reason to think that he ever leaves them to an open, long continued and habitual departure from a good practice. They are overcome by temptation; they are fometimes left by GoD to great and fcandalous tranfgreffion, that he may hereby flow them their dependance; but if they are his forgiven ones, on confideration, they fee and mourn for their iniquity, and are the first to condemn themfelves. It was thus with David, with Peter and all those faints whose fall is recorded in the word of GoD. An habitual bad practice wilfully continued, is, therefore most fure evidence of an unforgiven state. Those, who live habitually in a bad practice, however strongly they may hope, and however firmly they may fuppose themselves to be the favorites of sovereign grace, are still under the bonds of iniquity.

3. In judging of our forgiveness, we ought to confider the motives, by which we are inclined to actions visibly good. Herod heared gladly, and the action was visibly good; but we know that his motive, like his character, was bad. Jehu cried, come fee my zeal for the Lord; but his motive condemned him. It may be fo with us, and before we determine ourfelves to be accepted by God, we ought to fearch what our hearts mean by the vifibly good actions, which proceed from them. Do we pray to GoD from a love of him; or from fear and the formality of education? Do we worfhip in the temple to glorify his great name; or to be feen of men, and be called civil, well-conducted perfons? Are we just, right, pure, and kind in our connections with men becaufe it is right thus to be, and a compliance with obligation to them and the great creator; or is all this done to invite their favor and make them the fame to us? In the latter cafe, there is no evidence we are forgiven.

It is not proper to approve ourfelves, without greater evidence than we poffibly can have concerning other perfons. We know their hearts by their actions; we know our own by confcioufnefs. However regular, pure, and vifibly obedient our lives may be; however punctual we are in the fervices of religion; however liberal to others, or fevere in bodily mortifications; all this can be no evidence of fincerity, when we feel a confcious oppofition of heart to the holy character, law and government of GoD.

4. LIVING in the practice of any fin against the dictates of confcience; or in the omiffion of any known duty, is a great evidence against the fincerity of our faith.

IT is not faid, that christians do never live in the neglect of known duty. They have much imperfection, and may fin against confcience; but it is not fuppofed they will do it habitually, and for a great length of time together. The question is not, how far one who hath been forgiven may backflide and, for a feason, fin against his known duty; but it is concerning the prefent evidence of forgiveness. Certainly there can be no prefent evidence of forgiveness, while living in known fin or omitting known duty. CHRIST fays, No man can ferve two masters ; fer either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elfe he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot ferve God and mammon. Living in the omission of known duty, or the practice of known fin, is ferving fin. It is ferving a mafter, which is directly opposed to GoD; and at the time, GOD is not received. There can be no prefent evidence that the Lord is our reconciled Gon, when we are not ferving him. In fuch a ftate all the evidence is against us.

THERE is a very dubious condition, in which many of mankind who have christian knowledge and means are found. It is the following. They believe doctrinally in the christian scheme of faith, and in the need of a gracious renovation by the Spirit of God. They look back on fome former time, in which they were anxioufly concerned for falvation, and obtained a hope that GOD had forgiven and accepted them. They have much relapfed from their former punctuality in religious duties, from their fense of divine and eternal things, and from watchfulnefs over themfelves and against temptation. They are become greater conformifts to the world; although their lives may be free from visible immoralities. Still they have a hope, built on a remembrance of their fuppofed, ancient, chrif-tian experience. These perfons live in the omiffion of known duty, for according to their own idea of themfelves, the fervor of piety is gone from their hearts. They are living and hoping, on ancient and not on prefent experience. I have called this a dubious condition; but perhaps I have called it by too mild a name, for nothing appears to fhow it is not a fatal one.

WHY fhould men have a prefent hope, without prefent evidence ? Can there be a rational comfort in it ? Muft not all men, looking back by memory on paft experience of which prefent feeling is gone, fay, we may have been miftaken. And if we may have been miftaken, in all that is paft, and have no prefent exercife of grace—no prefent evidence, why do we hope? Why do we fulpend an eternity, on the fuppofed poffeffion of a temper, from which we find no prefent exercife ? This is not hoping from evidence ; but from a memory, that we once fuppofed we had evidence. FURTHER, is there any thing in the word of GOD which thus defcribes religion? Do not all the defcriptions of grace in the heart, reprefent it, as a prefent temper and exercife—a living principle—a prefent love of GOD, and prefent obedience to his commands, in the most fpiritual part of them? Ought we to be eafy with our state, on any evidence, which would not give us fortitude and peace in death; and will any thing which is short of prefent love, faith and repentance give this?

BUT it may be inquired, are we to derive no comfort from past experience, and is there in it no evidence of our forgivenes? To which I answer.

WITH refpect to comfort, it cannot be found in paft experience, without a prefent enjoyment of God. A most unholy hypocrite may have the comfort of thinking, that he is fafe from future punishment. The fecure finner and infidel, may have the comfort of fupposing there is no punishment prepared for the wicked; but this is not christian happines. It is a peace common to backfliding christians, to hypocrites, and to openly defying finners. The true christian comfort, is a prefent delight in God and in duty, and cannot be had by a memory of any thing that is past.

WITH respect to evidence of forgiveness from pass experience; it may be of great use in union with the present exercise of holy affections. From what is pass, the christian judges better of what he now feels; and by a remembrance of GoD's pass pass kindness, which he knows to be similar to what he now feels, he is affured of divine love and rejoices with joy unspeakable and full of glory. But to derive this benefit of pass experience, it feems there muss be also the present exercise of faith, love and repentance. A bare recollection of fomething, that is at present wholly unknown by the heart, must be a weak ground of hope. There is no present test for distinguishing between delufion and reality. The mind can only fay to itfelf, I once felt fomething that I fuppofed to be fatisfying, and which I then thought fo excellent in its nature and its attending comfort, that it must be from God. I know that I was relieved and delighted, but I now feel nothing of the fame bleffednefs; and therefore, it might all be a delution, which is now leading me to eternal ruin. It is only by a renewal of fimilar affections and views in the mind, that paft experience becomes present evidence. Infinite wifdom hath ordered, that there is no good evidence of our forgiveness, but by present evangelical obedience; and it is the ordering of goodness to his imperfect children. If it were otherwife, and there could be evidence of our forgivenefs without the prefent exercise of a holy temper, it would tend greatly, to prolong feafons of backfliding from him. Being left without evidence, his people are now as liable to be warned by the terrors of a condemning law, as they were before they ever fled to him for refuge. It is not reasonable to wish for evidence of a divine reconcilement to us, any further than we find a prefent conformity to the GOD and law of infinite holinefs. We are ready to tell the unholy and profane, that they are unreasonable in defiring Gon to be reconciled to them, while of their prefent wrong temper. For the fame reafon, no man ought to with for evidence of God's gracious acceptance, further than he feels himfelf to be returned to his duty. A wifh contradictory to this, is fymptomatic of fome hidden infincerity in the heart, which will prove fatal in the end.

THERE is a very falfe idea, entertained by fome of being cloathed with CHRIST's righteoufnefs, and depending on this as evidence of their forgivenefs. The apostle speaks of not having his own righteoufnefs, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of CHRIST. So we are faid to be justified by the righteousness of faith; and exhorted to put on CHRIST. From fuch defcriptions as thefe, hath arifen the expreffion of being cloathed with CHRIST's righteoufnefs. They mean that we are justified, by the grace of GoD, through and for the fake of CHRIST's righteoufness. Being cloathed with CHRIST's righteoufnefs, is being forgiven and accepted by GoD, for the fake of what he hath done and fuffered. But it does not mean, that the perfonal righteousness of CHRIST, is made our personal righteousness. Although our own perfonal righteousness or fanctification cannot purchafe any favor at the hand of a holy GoD; it is neceffary to prepare us for the enjoyment of Gon; it is neceffary to receive the benefits of fovereign mercy; and it is also neceffary as evidence that the fruits of CHRIST's righteousness are imparted to us. Our own perfonal holinefs is the only evidence that we are forgiven through the rightcoulnels of CHRIST. Being cloathed with humility and other graces of the christian temper, is the proper evidence, that we are cloathed with forgiveness and the promises of eternal glory.

5. A DELIGHT in the duties of worship, especially in prayer, is an inseparable attendant of the faith to which forgiveness is promised.

IF any of you lack wifdom, let bim afk of GoD, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not : and it fhall be given him. But let him afk in faith. Prayer is the mouth by which faith offers its defires to GOD through JESUS CHRIST. When we confider the word of GOD, that none are forgiven but those who believe; when we further confider the office and use of faith, it seems impossible that a true believer fhould live in the habitual neglect of prayer. Of all divine worship, this is most agreeable to him. It is by prayer, that we place ourfelves most fensibly in the divine prefence; and if we love GoD, the means of approaching him and quickening our apprehenfions of his infinite glory cannot be neglected. It is by prayer that faith asks; and if we feel our needs we shall make them known. It is to prayer the promife is made; and if we believe the word of God, we shall obey in our manner of application. The usefulness of this duty is sufficiently testified in the word of God. If infinite wifdom hadnot knownit tobe neceffary for a godly life in CHRIST JESUS, we should not have had the commands, Pray without ceafing .- Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance.-Continuing inftant in prayer.-Night and day praying exceedingly. -Exhort therefore, that fir/t of all, supplications, prayers, interceffions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men. These precepts with many other, expreffed in the ftrongest language, clearly prove the usefulness and necessity of prayer in the chriftian life.

THE fame is known by the concurrent teftimony of christian experience. The people of GOD have ever borne witnefs, for the benefit, and comfort, and quickening efficacy of prayer in prosperity, in adversity, in resisting the tempta-tions of sense, in mortifying their remaining sin, in quickening all the gracious affections, and in giving a lively fense of present duty. This is fo uniformly true, that chriftians may always judge themfelves in a backfliding ftate, when their pleafure, fervency and frequency in prayer abates.

THE fame truth may be learned from the nature of religion. True religion is a love of GoD. Prayer is converfing with him, in fuch a way as becomes creatures to fpeak to an infinite Creator. This Creator is always and every where prefent to hear the fupplication. He permits us to fpeak to him through the Mediator, whenever we feel a heart disposed to praise, or any wants which need to be fupplied, or any dangers we wish to avoid. If God be the object of our fupreme love, it is impossible to refrain from speaking to him in the holy and humble manner which is permitted. Stated feafons of prayer will be pleafing, and in the midft of daily and neceffary occupations the heart will afcend to the giver of every good gift, and praife the fulnefs from which all our mercies proceed. Our hearts naturally feek the objects of our fupreme love, and it is as difficult to keep the true difciple of CHRIST from praying, as it is to divert those who are devoted to the world, from their farms, their merchandize, and their amufements.

IF this be truth, we have no right to depend on our own forgiveness, unless the worship of God, and efpecially prayer be a most pleasing and constant duty of our lives. It is probable, that many even among the believers of christian revelation, think themfelves to be religious and gracioufly forgiven, although they find none of this delight in worshipping Goo. Some may think thus, who are wholly unacquainted with the clofet ; who never kneeled with their families before the God of all grace, to praise his goodness and ask his daily prefervation and the forgiveness of their fins; and who rarely look within the fanctuary of God. All fuch, will probably think this reprefentation drawn too high. They cannot accord with it, without condemning themfelves, and frustrating the loofe hope, by which they spend their time of trial in this world—the only trial they will have for eternity. Let fuch perfons fearch the fcriptures of JESUS CHRIST and of the apofiles who were infpired by his Spirit, and if they can there point out a fcheme of religion which will fave the fouls of men, different from what has been reprefented, their fafety and their right to hope fhall be allowed. If they can fhow the confiftency of loving GoD fupremely, and ftill neglecting to obey, to think of him, and converfe with him ; it fhall be allowed they are fair candidates for heaven.

OVER the whole world there is a natural confcience in men, which disposes them to seek fafety, in the prefent and coming world. They are generally ready to hear every fcheme, which is proposed for that end. Hence it happens that innovators in religion find an eafy accels to mankind. They are heard with avidity, and the guilty, unholy multitude, hope they have found a way of eternal blifs, lefs condemning to their appetites and crimes, and requiring lefs holinefs than they have been ufed to hear. There would be no difficulty in christianizing the world if the doctrines of CHRIST might be accommodated to a finful heart and practice. Men will confent, for the fake of pacifying confcience, to own they belong to GoD, if they are not indeed obliged to ferve him. They will probably go further, and confent to ferve him in fome visible things, if they may be excufed from ferving him with the heart. There is no evidence that our faith is fincere, and we are forgiven; but a dedication of ourfelves, both body and spirit to the Lord. We must be wholly his or we do not belong to him, for we cannot ferve two masters. The works which will justify and prove our faith to be good, include the temper-the moral state of the heart-and all the actions of living in the world. This is glorifying him in our body and in our fpirit, which are his, and the only evidence of our eternal redemption. AMEN.

SERMON XIX.

PHILIPPIANS II. 12, 13.

-WORK out your own falvation with fear and tremb bling. For it is GOD which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleafure.

THIS exhortation, is founded upon a previous defeription, of the glorious and exalted ftate of JESUS CHRIST. Wherefore God alfo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name : that at the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth ; and that every tongue should confess, that JESUS CHRIST is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. From this high defcription of his dignity as God, Redeemer and Judge, the writer exhorts, work out your own falvation with fear and trembling. The greatness of the Judge, to whom every knee shall bow, and by whom every one shall be fentenced; the greatness and eternity of the good fought and the evil to be avoided; together with the divine action of GOD, on the minds of all who work fuccefsfully, are confiderations why it fhould be with fear and trembling.

THE following things will be confidered.

I. WHAT is included in falvation.

II. WHAT is meant, in the text, by working out our falvation.

I. WHAT is included in falvation.

It is fuppofed there can be no difpute what is meant by the word falvation in this paffage, and I defcribe it, not to fettle a difficult point; but as preparatory to the fucceeding part of my difcourfe. The natural and fcriptural meaning of the word falvation, is deliverance from fome evil, either natural or moral. Perfonal and national deliverances, from particular judgments, are called falvations. A fubject of difcourfe, often limits the meaning to particular efcapes and bleffings, fome of which are of fhort, and others of longer continuance.

IN the word of Gor, falvation commonly means, that forgiveness and fanctification through JESUS CHRIST, by which unholy and guilty finners, are prepared and shall be finally received, to the eternal glory and peace of heaven. This is the great falvation, ultimately including all bleffings, all holiness, happiness and glory which redeemed men can receive. This is always meant by the word falvation, in the gospel writings; unless, when the nature of the fubject limits it, to fome particular favor. This is the falvation, which the text exhorts us to work out with fear and trembling, because it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do, of his good pleasure.

IT may be useful for us particularly to confider what it contains.

HOLINESS is the principal thing. It is a deliverance from fin, a moral conformity to GOD and his law, and evangelical union to him through his Son JESUS CHRIST. Hence CHRIST was promifed to fave his people from their fins .- Who gave himself for us, that he might redcem us from all iniquity, and purify us to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.-According to his mercy he faved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoft. Salvation begins in holinefs and ends in glory. It is begun in this world and grows with the perfonal holinefs of GOD's people. This was meant by CHRIST when he faid, For behold, the kingdom of GOD is within you. The fanctification of God's people, with the happiness rising out of it, is the beginning of their glory. It is the fpiritual water given by CHRIST, which shall be in them a well of water, springing up into eternal life. There is no room to question, that holines is the most effential thing in this falvation. We may hear and have the offer, but without holinefs have not the thing itfelf.

HAPPINESS is alfo included in this falvation. Infinite wifdom hath fo formed the univerfe, and the mind of man; that happiness the most pure, the greatest and most perpetual, arises from a holy temper and practice. This is the happiness of GOD himself, and he communicates it to his people according to their measure of acting and receiving. When they become perfect in holiness, their happiness will be the greatest possible.

WHILE we confider happinefs as part of the gofpel falvation, it must be remembered, that it is confined to fuch happiness as arises from a holy temper and practice. Sinners find pleasure in their vices, yet none will pretend this to be part of the christian falvation. The greater their pleasure is, the further they are from being faved, and the more difficult it becomes for them to enter into the kingdom of glorious peace. The ungodly relifh of their hearts is gaining ftrength, and they become more difqualified for tafting the pleafures of religion. This defcription ought not to be confined to the unhappy perfons, who are plunging deep into the pleafures of groß fenfuality. It applies, with propriety, to the pride of felf-righteoufnefs, which, by every moment of its continuance, is fhutting the heart against the true pleafure of christian humility.

II. WHAT is meant, in the text, by working out our own falvation.

To fix the meaning of a writer, it is often neceffary, we fhould know the character of the perfons addreffed. Efpecially, it is proper to confider this, when their character is ftrongly marked in the accompanying parts of difcourfe, which is the cafe with respect to this exhortation. It is an exhortation to christians, whose hearts were already fanctified in part, and in whom that work of grace was begun, which would certainly end in the falvation of final glory .- This may be known from the preceding words-Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my prefence only, but now much more in my absence; work out your own falvation with fear and trembling. He calls them beloved brethren, an appellation applied by the facred writers, peculiarly to the people of God. The exhortation is to those, who had already obeyed, not only while he was with them; but alfo, in his abfence from them. They had given evidence of fincerity by a feafon of perfeverance, in an age, when every profeffing christian was affailed by the most trying evils, which heathen and jewish enmity could inflict.

HAVING afcertained the character of the perfons, to whom the writer addreffed himfelf, the meaning of the exhortation becomes apparent, and is conceived to be as follows.

"I ADDRESS you, as perfons who are chriftians, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Spirit. You are my beloved brethren, by profession and a visible obedience. My hope concerning you is strong; for the obedience which I beheld, has been continued in my absence. Go on, seeking perfection in holiness, until the day of perfect glory. Be diligent, finish, and make full proof of the falvation, which is already begun in you; already given to you by the riches of mercy in CHRIST JESUS."

THE latter part of the verfe confirms this explanation. For it is GOD which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Real christians know the difficulties of obedience. They wrestle against principalities, against powers, again/t the rulers of the darkne/s of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. They are furrounded with temptations, the allurements of fense, the feducing influence of bad example and the company of evil men, with whom they muft be connected, in many things, until GOD calls them from the world. The objects of their natural affection, and of family endearment, who must be their daily companions, are often the enemies of the gospel, and opposed to that holy life which they know to be their duty. They feel a remainder of fin in their own hearts, by which they are laid open to the power of external temptations. Of this, the apostle hath given us a most excellent description, in his own experience. For I know that in me (that is, in my flefb) dwelleth no good thing : for to will is prefent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not. For the good that I would, I do not : but the evil which I would not, that I do. I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of GOD after the inward man. But I fee another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin, which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death!

In view of these obstacles, it appears to the christian, a difficult thing, to work out or effect that perfection in holinefs, which is his falvation. On this account when his faith is weak, he is often ready to defpond; and it feems, as though he must be destroyed by his spiritual enemies, and the treachery of his own heart. Knowing this, the apostle adds to his exhortation, the fupporting truth; for it is GOD which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. THO' your remaining fin be great, and your temptations many, GOD is with you. You are not working alone. In this cafe, you ought to look back to your former unholy, unpardoned state. You now know, that if Gop had not wrought in you, by his renewing fpirit, you would have been in the gall of bitterness and under the bonds of iniquity. Now you know, that it was God who first wrought in you to repent and believe, and that you was made obedient by a divine efficiency. You have no reason to defpond; for GoD, who hath begun his own work, can finish it, and overcome all your spiritual enemies. You have the promife of his fpirit, to enlighten and fanctify, to remove your remaining fin, and fit you for his own prefence. Under a fenfe of weaknefs you may plead the covenant, and afk his grace to control your wills and direct your practice.

THIS is all the encouragement to diligence which a weak chriftian can need, and it was proper to be added with the exhortation, work out your own falvation. It has the nature of a promife, to those who have become evangelically obedient, that God will in future be with them. To the unbelieving and impenitent, to those who have never obeyed, there are no promifes made; nor is it fit there should be any. If God hath not begun to influence their wills, that is, work in them to will; there is no certainty from any thing he hath faid in the fcriptures, that he ever will thus work. As they are now in a ftate of unpardoned opposition to divine holinefs, and have never, in any respect, complied with the condition to which final falvation is promifed, they may always remain as ignorant and obdurate as they be at prefent. Those who have become obedient, in their future exertions must depend on the aid of promised grace. This dependance, is using means in the exercise of faith, which to those who do it is never in vain. Whoever, prays, hears and meditates, looking to GOD for the fanctifying efficacy of his holy fpirit, will by experience find him working in them to will and to do; and they will be fenfible no greater encouragement is needed.

To the exhortation, there is another direction added. Work out your own falvation, with fear and trembling. Be diligent, be ftrenuous, be reverent in all your endeavours.

BE diligent, for there is much to be done in refifting fin-and feeking holinefs, and the confequences are great and eternal. Be strenuous; for weak and intermitting efforts, are not adequate to the difficulties which you will meet. Be reverent ; for fuccefs depends wholly on a divine co-operation, and none have right to expect his fpirit, unlefs they have a most reverent fense of his being, action and purity. In working out his own falvation, the chriftian ought to have a deep fense of the danger of fin. Known and wilful fin will always prevent the fenfible communication of strength from God. His children may be permitted to fall into wilful rebellion; but when this is the cafe, they must be brought into a state of trembling concern, before they will experience again a fanctifying efficacy with the means which are used.

EXPERIENCE in the christian life, will show the admirable fitnefs and truth of the exhortation in the text. It will convince of the need of working. That no one can grow in faith and holiness, without a most diligent attention to the means, which infinite wildom hath appointed. Whenever, reading the word of God, prayer, meditation, felf-examination, and a most watchful care over the heart and practice are omitted ; fpiritual affection will ceafe to be fenfible, and both the power and comforts of religion will be gone. Although means cannot fanctify, God never gives his influence to purify his people without them; and to hope for this, in the omiffion of means, is high prefumption.

CHRISTIAN experience will give conviction of its being neceffary for GOD to work in them. After the longest and most fuccessful use of means, a use fo successful that they dare not omit them; there is still the most thorough conviction, that all is in vain, if the spirit of GOD be denied. When they are most vigorous in the use of appointed means; they are always moft importunate for a divine influence to accompany. The neceffity of ufing means, and the afcription of all holinefs to the immediate action of GoD, are truths which fome pretend to confider as contradictory. It is not feen, in what fenfe, they are fo, any more in moral than in natural events. But whatever objections there be, in this matter, chriftian experience will foon remove them. All the holy, will bear a joint teftimony, that it is of the Lord's working they are fanctified; alfo, they will affure us GoD did this, when they were moft diligent and perfevering in the means of religion.

FURTHER, christian experience will produce a deep concern, left we endeavour and exert ourfelves, in fuch a way, as will grieve the holy fpirit to deny his aid. GOD is as jealous of his own honor and of the refpect due to his directions, in the difpenfation of fovereign grace ; as he is in judging and rewarding by the law. Thofe things, which men think to be fmall deviations from the prescribed rule, are often a sufficient reason, for the most holy spirit to deny his quickening influence. If we work in a way not commanded ; if we add human invention to commanded fervices : if we divide the means, which GOD hath joined; if we use means, while living in any known and wilful tranfgreffion; or if we depend on the means, and think to obtain by our own ftrength through their efficacy, forgetting to look to GoD, the use will be without a bleffing. Infinite wifdom and goodnefs is very particular in the fovereign bestowment of his aid, in order to keep us watchful against fin, and preferve in us a fense of our dependence. These things are taught to a christian, by his experience in the life of faith and godlinefs; therefore he works with fear and trembling, left he fhould grieve away the fpirit of life.

In explaining this text, it has been applied to chriftians, who have obeyed and become fanctified in part. I here feel myfelf brought near to a fubject of great importance, which, though plain to the experienced chriftian, is very liable to mifreprefentation and imprudent expression. It is concerning fuch use of means, as may be found in perfons, who are not fanctified, and forgiven through faith and repentance. Inquiring minds will come to this fubject, and find difficulties in it; alfo, they are in danger of embracing fome wrong conclusions, unless they have been experimentally taught, or instruction is given them, in the most guarded manner.

THERE are two errors of a fatal tendency, into which we may fall. Either, that there is nothing to be done by unfanctified men; or, that the external fervices to which they are excited by fear and felf-love alone, are the begining of real holinefs and preparation for heaven. It is dangerous to believe either of thefe. There is no real preparation for heaven, without fome degree of moral conformity to GoD and his kingdom, and the unfanctified finner hath no beginning of fuch conformity. All his external works in praying, hearing and feeking are for himfelf and not for God. If a terrible law were repealed, and a way prepared for fin to triumph, he would feek no longer, and hear and pray no more. Therefore, there is no preparation for heaven, nor any falvation actually begun in his foul, by all his affiduous fervices. We cannot tell him that God is working in him. The defign of infinite wifdom, in awakening and fetting the terrors of the law before his mind, is to make him acquainted with his own heart, and convince him of a hardnefs and enmity against divine holinefs and fovereignty. In this cafe, to tell him that his concern and performance of external fervice, on legal motives, is fanctification begun, would be counteracting the work of GoD, on his understanding and confcience.

On the other hand, to give any reprefentation which will make him conclude he may ceafe the form of prayer, and exchange these fervices, for the profane and thoughtlefs circle of men, is directing him to fure destruction. We never fee GOD fanctifying the thoughtlefs and fecure. It is the manner of infinite wildom, to open mens understanding on their peril and guilt, before he fanctifies them. It is also his manner to use their own legal observances, as means of teaching them the fin of their hearts, and their abfolute dependence on fovereign, renewing grace. Tho? renewing grace doth not always follow fuch conviction, we do not fee it given in another way ; and by looking through this fubject we may fee the propriety of this divine difpenfation. The whole experience of the church, can give no reason to suppose God will fanctify fecure finners, who live in open neglect of a Sabbath, of prayer, of meditation on their own flate, and of anxious ' concern for escape. These thoughtless fouls are in the broad way without knowing it.

To illustrate this fubject, I will propose and answer several questions.

QUESTION 1. THE text has been explained, as an exhortation to chriftians, who have already experienced fanctifying grace; may not unholy men, be exhorted to work out their falvation with fear and trembling ?

Uu

ANSWER. ALL unholy men ought to be directed, to work out their own falvation, with fear and trembling; but we cannot give them the fame encouragement, which may be given, to fuch as have become evangelically obedient. We cannot, in truth, tell them, that GOD now doth or ever hath, wrought in them both to will and to do .--- The preceptive part of the exhortation belongs to all men; the encouraging and promiffory part, only to the obedient.

THERE is but one law, one kind of obedience, one fet of promifes, one fcheme of duty and practice placed before mankind. The command and exhortation are to all. The promife is to all. who comply with the conditions on which it is given. The threatening is against all, who remain of the temper and heart against which it is denounced. There are two characters among men; the holy and unholy. One of them is entitled to a promife; the other, only to fuch threatenings as are merited by difobedience. But there are not two schemes of duty to be placed in their view; one for finners, and the other for faints. Unlibly men are proper fubjects of the fame exhortations as are given to the obedient. In defcribing duty, and directing the way of falvation, we do not find the word of GOD makes any difference; but all are commanded to repent and believe, and live in all holy conversation. The different address of GOD to faints and finners takes place in defcribing their character, and the way in which he will treat them; and not in defcribing obligation and duty, for this is the fame on all. And finners ought to be reminded of their indifpenfible obligation to perform all the duties of christian obedience.

Q. 2. Do unfanctified perfons ever begin to work out their own falvation ?

A. THEY never do begin.-Of the many things which they do, fome from fear, fome from felf-righteoufnefs, and fome from falfe expectations; none amount to a beginning of real falvation. A confenting, willing heart is the first thing in falvation, and all they have done comes no nearer to this, than their first excitement to ferioufnefs. Although fin hath changed its form and manner of acting, it still reigns. Visible ferioufnefs and inquiry come from the fame heart, as was before acted out, in vanity and a contempt of moral obligation. It is fear and not love which hath made the change of conversation. The character and law of GOD are no more amiable in their fight, and are no more loved for their own excellence, than they ever were. The finner is not weaned from himfelf, and every thing is done from a principle of fupreme felf-regard. There is no regard to the honor of GoD. Therefore, falvation, which confifts in holinefs of the heart, is not begun.

THE feeking finner, in the fituation I am confidering, hath not wrought out his falvation in part. Some things, which may be matter of command, are of fuch a nature by the very laws of action, that they may be part done and part not done. A command to go to a diftant place, requires beginning, and progrefs approaching towards the end of the command, and may be in part effected. It is not thus in loving and choofing GOD, in which beginning falvation confifts. The will or choice of the heart is for him or against him; he is chosen or rejected; and no part of falvation is wrought out until he is chofen. After a finner is fanctified and hath repented and believed in CHRIST, it will be proper to fay his falvation is wrought out in part ; but before this, he is in total difobedience. In all he does, unholy motives are apparent, and his refolutions and inquiring what he fhall do to be faved, arife from a heart which doth not wifh God to reign.

Q. 3. Is the awakened finner better or worfe than he would have been in a flate of fecurity and forgetfulnels of GoD ?

A. IT is conceived this queffion tends only to useless fpeculation, and that it was first originated, with an unfriendly defign, to difcredit, either ferioufness or those doctrines of revelation, which represent men utterly finful by nature, and dependent on the lovereign action of GoD for their deliverance. There is no difficulty in giving this general answer to the question, that men are becoming worfe, until they repent; whether they be in an anxious or a fecure state. They are adding to an immenfe amount of past fin and guilt. The habit or strength of unholy affections is increasing. They are going further from GOD and duty, and becoming exposed to a more heavy doom. Continued unbelief, or living without faith in CHRIST and repentance towards Gon, always implies a ftate growing worfe and worfe. If there be any who know they are deftitute of real religion, and yet think they are not daily becoming more finful and guilty, they contradict the truth of the apostle. But evil men and feducers fhall wax worfe and worfe, diceiving, and being deceived. But if the question be, whether inquiring finners, who still remain in unbelief, wax worfe either lefs or more, than they would, in a ftate of fecurity; it is not wife. It is impossible for men to form a fcale of increasing fin and apply it with any certainty to the conditions of the human heart. It is enough for us to know that without holinefs, no man pleafeth Gon.-It is doubtlefs true, that the inquiring finner acts against an increase of light, which is a circumstance enhancing guilt. It may alfo be true, that many affections of his heart, which are completely finful, by the terrors of the law, are laid under fome reftraint, and are not pointed with fuch energy of oppolition againft GoD, as they would be if the law were out of fight. It was before faid the queftion is ufelefs, and it was introduced in this place only to guard againft a mifreprefentation of fome other fentiments, which are freely expressed in this difcourfe.

Q. 4. Is the fecure finner, who thinks nothing of his unhappy cafe, and lives in neglect of the vifible fervices of religion, as probable a fubject of fanctifying and forgiving grace, as others are, who attend to them ?

A. 1ft. WITH respect to the fecure, there is no prefent reason to hope for them in particular, that they will ever come to repentance. We know there is a GOD of infinite power and goodnefs. He is able, and it is poffible he may turn them; but as we know from his express information many will be left, nothing appears why they will not be of the wretched number. Infinite wifdom gives us 'no evidence to conclude they will be reclaimed, and every thing looks contrary to it. They have not a folemn fense of GOD, his law, their guilt and danger. They neither wish to turn, nor fee the danger of not turning. They are not in the way of obtaining certain points of doctrinal knowledge, which fovereign wifdom ufually gives to finners, and gives through the medium of their endeavours, before he fanctifies and forgives. They do not feel flain by the law, and it is probable they never will, until they have attempted to live by it; and they will not attempt to live by it, until they are, by its terrors, awakened from fecurity and driven to feek life in their own ftrength.

2dly. WITH refpect to inquiring finners, who are anxious and fay what shall we do to be faved -who are performing many of the visible fervices of religion, and take great pains to escape the wrath to come, there is much more room to hope God will be merciful to them. It is the ufual method of divine fovereignty, to teach men they have a difeafe, before he heals; to wound, before he applies the balm; to flay by the law, before he makes alive by the gospel. Knowing this to be the method of infinite wildom, when we fee their confciences alive, their fear very fenfible, their apprehensions of GOD and of their own danger fo real as makes them endeavour to efcape punishment; though it be not evangelical obedience, we hope that free grace yet defigns their good. Though they are under the bonds of fin, and have hearts as much as ever oppofed to gofpel holinefs; though they are attempting falvation in a way which will never give it, and are thus adding fin to fin; though they are difhonoring the infinite grace of the gofpel, and by every trembling fervice, which they offer from their prefent motives, are denying evangelical humility and the loveliness of CHRIST; though they appear to have no experimental ideas of evangelical obedience, we still hope that fovereign mercy defigns them eternal good.

AND why do we hope this? Not becaufe they are becoming worthy or better, or are in a golpel fense becoming obedient; for there is no gofpel obedience fhort of faith and repentance. Not because their reigning temper would not make them eternally miferable if left under its power. Not because there is any promife of GoD to perfons in this fituation; for many are brought thus far, and then grieving the holy fpirit by their long refiftance, he leaves them to fecurity, and they become, apparently, more hardened in fin, than ever before.

WE hope, becaufe God hath not wholly denied his convincing influence. He is acting on their minds, in a way naturally calculated, to give that experimental knowledge of fin, guilt and fpiritual impotency, which is ufually wrought in finners before their change through grace. He is preparing them, through the medium of their own finful endeavours, and their stubborn refistance to gospel submission; to receive falvation, when imparted, as a sovereign gift. They are alfo by this, in many refpects which might be mentioned, prepared to receive and use the grace of GOD without abufing it. When falvation is begun, they will know it is the Lord who hath done it. They will be fenfible, that all they have done, and the fervices by which they thought themfelves to be making their calling and election fure, were wholly finful, and the motives from which they acted were all unholy. They will afcribe to fovereign grace the glory of refcuing them, at a moment, in which they were most unworthy to be fpared.

FROM what has been faid on this fubject, it appears that great prudence and faithfulnefs are neceffary, in those who teach inquiring finners. It is one of the most folemn fituations in which a religious instructor can be placed.

THE finful perfon takes no pleafure in the vifible fervices of religion for their own fake. He is impelled by danger to think. He wifnes he could eafily forget his own cafe. The fervices to which he reforts have nothing in them pleafing, and are only chofen in preference to a true obedience of the heart. If, in this moment, the inftructor fays, any thing which can be caught hold of, as an excufe for returning to former fe-curity and negligence, it will be received, and the last state is worse than the first. Or if the instructor leads him to suppose he is fast growing better; that a holy GOD is in fome degree fatiffied with his external reformation, his meditation, prayers, and zeal in a good caufe ; that if he will go on in this way, there is no doubt of his fafety; this inftruction will quiet confcience, and build up a felf-righteoufnefs, which is directly opposed to gospel holinefs.

INTEGRITY is wifdom. The finner, in this cafe hath a right to the truth; for his foul, his eternity is at rifque. He fhould be led to a fight of his heart; should be told that all these fervices are not the true gofpel duty required from him; that he must despair of help and fafety by all he does, and bow before a fovereign GoD, who may deliver or reject as he pleafeth. The nature of unbelief, with all that variety of forms, which it affumes for felf-juftification and eafe of confcience, fhould be explained with most diligent care. He fhould be told that all he does is evil only continually. That while he is endeavouring to make himfelf better, on his prefent motives, he is becoming more worthy of the end which he fears. At the fame time he fhould be cautioned against relapsing into fecurity, and exhorted to use all means, for keeping alive a fense of his miferable ftate. He fhould be told, God is not obliged in justice ever to forgive; still, that there is more hope, in his prefent cafe, than if he were in deep fecurity. It fhows God hath not yet faid, my fpirit shall strive no more. For perfons on whom this fentence is paffed there is no hope. After all, let every one remember, there is no obedience, without repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord JESUS CHIRST, AMEN.

SERMON XX.

EXODUS XX. 8.

REMEMBER the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

THE meaning of the word SABBATH, is a day of reft and holy delight in GOD and in his works. Creation and providence are natural evidence of the being of a Creator. Human reafon joins with revelation, in dictating, that fome part of our time fhould be specially dedicated to worship the Creator and giver of our existence and all we enjoy.

A SABBATH was inflituted in the beginning. After the creation was completed in fix days, it is faid, GoD ended his works which he had made : and rested the seventh day from all bis works which he had made. And GoD bleffed the seventh day and sanctified it.

HE fanctified it. By his fpecial command it was fet apart to a holy use; to holy fervices, and meditation on most holy objects and truths, This doth not imply that it is lawful to be unholy on other days. Every mind is able to make the diffinction between facred and fecular employments, both of which are fit in their proper feafon. The Sabbath is to be wholly devoted to the facred employments of worfhip and religious inftruction, and to our preparation for another world; which is defcribed as an eternal Sabbath of praise and holiness to God.

FROM this early appointment of a Sabbath, together with the reafonableness of the institution, it hath been found that all people, whether chriftians or heathen, have had appointed feafons of homage to the GODS whom they adored. Tho' fanctifying a feventh part of time, has been forgottenby multitudes of men; it does not appear, that a fense of propriety in appointing certain feafons for religious worfhip, has been obliterated. by the total depravity of human nature, even from heathen minds. Although apostates from chriftianity travelling into the shades of heathenism, may have given this reprefentation of fome tribes of men; the fact doth not appear to be well authenticated. The reporters were prejudiced by their own wish to find fuch a fact. Alfo they have been generally of fuch a character, that even heathen would early difcover their impiety, and hide from them their facred mysteries. The greatest number, of those who have denied the fitnels of appropriate feafons for divine worship, will be found among apostates from christianity. These perfons, having long finned against great light, in many instances, appear to be given up to ftrong delufion. Their refiftance to revealed light, has ended in the stupefaction of natural conscience, fo that reason remonstrates no longer against the rebellion of a wicked heart. This is the natural confequence of long continued fin against clear light. Those, who are conscious, they have been thus doing, ought to suffect their own judgment; for they are making their minds dark, and it is not improbable that GoD may give them up to believe a lie.

THE account of the patriarchal ages, given by Mofes, is concife, and only fuch events are recorded, as were abfolutely neceffary to teach the human character, and justify the fucceeding events of divine government. It appears that divine knowledge, was given occafionally by fpecial revelations, to particular perfons and families, who did not wish to forget GOD and plunge into deep idolatry. Whatever, of those early ages, was neceffary for our prefent inftruction, may doubtlefs be found recorded in the fcriptures. We find there hath been a church from the beginning, in which the true God hath been worshipped. We have reason to suppose, that in the church a feventh part of time was acknowledged and obferved as facred; and that there hath always been a remnant, who refted and fanctified the Sabbath of the Lord according to his own example.

WHEN the Mofaic difpenfation was given the law of the Sabbath was renewed. It was introduced as one of the ten commandments, which are a fummary of the duties due to God and man. In the Mofaic revelation, we find the moft pofitive laws appointing the day, the manner of obfervation, the duties of a religious worfhip to be performed, and penalties on the difobedient. God calls the Sabbath his covenant with the people of Ifrael. Wherefore the children of Ifrael shall keep the Sabbath, to obferve the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a fign between me and the children of Ifrael forever. Of fuch importance did God elteem the keeping of a Sabbath, that his visible appearance for them, as their covenant God, depended upon their obedience to this inftitution.

IN all the fucceeding prophets, profaning the Sabbath is mentioned as a fin, which directly exposed them to the most desolating judgments of heaven; and when they kept the Sabbath of the Lord, we find him remarkably appearing for them in the hour of peril. In the fequel of this dif-courfe, we shall fee the connexion between a holy keeping of the Sabbath, and a performance of other religious duty; fo that a people or perfon profaning this inftitution, against their own knowledge, cannot be fuppofed holy. This accounts for the ftrict guard GOD hath placed over the Sabbath; for his promifes to a faithful performance of it; and his threatened judgments against its profanation. From thoroughly examining this fubject, we shall find a connexion between a holy keeping of GoD's day, and all the bleffings men need. The bleffings of this world, as well as of another .- The bleffings of order-civil regularity and good governmentfamily fubordination-diffusion of knowledge among the people-perfonal piety-and eternal life. None of these can be had, but through an observance of God's holy day. The loss of civil and focial good and of the kingdom of heaven is the penalty for difobedience. If men forget their everlasting good, they ought not to deny and neglect the Sabbath, fo long as they with for focial peace and jullice in this world. This view of the fubject, justifies the wildom and goodness of Gon, in the multitude of injunctions, reproofs, threatenings, and promifes recorded in his word. It also justifies his punishment of his church by enemies and other external judgments for their neglect of the Sabbath. It was better for his people, they should be brought back to confideration by an external fcourge; than fuffered to go on in a neglect of divine worfhip, which muft end in the utter extinction of that moral fentiment, by which alone there can be peace in families and juffice in civil fociety.

UNDER the christian dispensation, the law of a Sabbath is continued in its full force. Although there be a change of time, from the feventh to the first day of the week, in commemoration of CHRIST's refurrection; a feventh part of time is referved as facred to the worship of Gon. The fame general reafons for keeping a Sabbath, which have been from the beginning do fill continue. There is not an intimation of the law or duty being repealed. It was a precept of the moral law, which is of everlafting obligation. We have the example of CHRIST and his apoftles for keeping holy time. And there are a multitude of precepts, enjoining holinefs, chriftian duty, the worship of GOD, the rights and manner of instruction and worship, which teach christians the obfervance of a Sabbath, plainly as could be expressed by a repetition of the original institution.

ALTHO' reafon can determine the propriety of worfhipping GOD on flated feafons; it doth not appear that the exact proportion of time to be thus confecrated could be known by us without a revelation. If this were left to human decifion, there would be great diverfity of fentiment, among thofe, who are well affected to divine honor; and thofe who diflike his fervice, would foon fall into a total neglect of the duty. Infinite wifdom, looking on the natural and moral flate, condition and wants of men, is able to point out the proportion of time, that ought to be confecrated as a Sabbath. Experience has confirmed the wifdom of the proportion, and fhows that it does not interfere with a provision for the wants of the body, and is also fufficient for a most happy effect in prefent fociety and in preparing our minds for the world to come.

As it is proper, that the proportion of Sabbatical time fhould be determined by GoD; fo it is, alfo, that the particular day or time fhould be appointed by his high authority. If the particular time were not appointed ungrateful men would defraud GoD of his right; and by endeavouring to accommodate facred time to their fecular purpofes, all focial union in the worfhip of GoD would be fruftrated.

ONE of the great benefits of an inftituted Sabbath is, that it fecures focial worfhip. The nature of men is focial. Moral obligation and the laws of religion are focial. The human mind is powerfully affected by a focial union, in adoring and praifing Gon-in feeking inftruction of our duty-and offering up our prayers. Both focial and folitary worfhip, are in their place abfolutely neceffary for a life of religion; and it may juftly be questioned, whether any perfon who entirely neglects one, ever performs the other with any confiderable propriety. If the fanctuary be deferted; there will be a lofs of those holy focial affections in the foul, which give warmth and fervency in the clofet. If the clofet be deferted, focial worfhip will degenerate into formality or pageantry, and there will not be that folemn fenfe of God and our own wants, which is best gained in retirement, where external enticements are removed, and we feel ourfelves alone with a great and holy God. There is a wonderful harmony between divine inftitutions, and the natural principles on which the human mind is constructed, feels and acts. This confideration alone, if it were thoroughly fearched might go far to convince an infidel. The harmony of natural and moral law, fhows the divine author and proves moral obligation on men. There cannot be in our minds, a due feeling of the holy and focial obligations of religion, without focial worfhip; and there cannot be any flated focial worfhip without a Sabbath.

A MULTITUDE of perfons, in the christian world, who neglect public focial worfhip of Gon, do hereby fully prove themfelves to be deftitute of piety. Want of health and opportunity may be accepted as an excuse ; but after these, there remains no excufe. If they fay, they can worfhip alone---that they are the best judges of their own wants---can best call on GoD for themselves; all thefe are no excufe. Even allowing all this, ftill they ought not to neglect focial worfhip. God is the best judge, and can tell what he will accept, and how and where he will give the aid of his Spirit. If religion confifts in focial affections, it is impoffible that worship should be always best performed alone. It is obstinacy against infinite wildom to contend in this point, and prefumption to think we are the best judges after God hath expressed his precept. If men neglect apparent commands, although they may think themfelves fcrupuloufly attentive to duty in many other things; they have still no reason to expect a divine bleffing on the things which they are attentive to do.

AFTER all, there is from experience, little reafon to credit the fincerity of thofe, who fay they are the beft judges of their own wants, and of the manner and time of worfhipping GoD. There is great reafon to fear it is merely an excufe for neglecting a known duty; and that they have become fo hardened, as to pretend a ferious defence for the neglect of GoD's command. We do not find thole who neglect public focial worfhip, attentive to duty either in the family or clofet. They do not appear to have that folemnity, that fenfe of a prefent GoD and of their own wants, which accompany much private devotion. Either flupidity and thoughtleffnefs of GoD, or great impiety are marked in their whole appearance. If GoD were to fet eternity before fuch minds, in the manner it may appear to them at death, and will certainly open to them when they enter it ; it would entirely filence the excufe that they beft knew their own wants, and the proper manner and time of worfhipping GoD.

AFTER thefe general remarks on the fubject, I fhall attempt the following things.

I. INQUIRE how the Sabbath is to be fance tified,

II. To defcribe the worldly benefits, which refult from a faithful obfervance of the inflitution.

III. To defcribe its happy influence in preparing us for the world to come.

I. I am to inquire how the Sabbath is to be fanctified.

THE words holy and holinefs, when applied to minds, mean a conformity to GoD and his law. It is the temper, affections and practice which conflitute moral and evangelical obedience. Holinefs is our whole duty, refulting from the character of all the moral agents with whom we are connected, and from our relation to them. It is our preparation for heavenly bleffednefs, and the evidence of our forgivenefs by the free grace of GoD through JESUS CHRIST. The holinefs of intelligent minds, must therefore confist in voluntary exercise of the heart, and a correfpondent practice in our treatment of GOD, and our brethren of every degree in the rational universe.

HOLINESS is alfo afcribed to objects inanimate —to times—to places—to offices—and to many things which can neither exercife volition nor understand. Thus the house of God, his Sabbath, and all the things employed in his worship are called holy. Whatever is specially devoted to a facred use, is in this fense holy unto the Lord, and a misapplication is considered by God as a grievous fin.

REMEMBER the Sabbath day to keep it holy. In this precept the word holy is to be underflood in both the aforementioned fenfes. The time of the whole day is to be made facred to the fervice of God in worfhipping him. No other ufe of it, either in labor, or amufement, or the promotion of fecular concerns, or in thinking of the interefts and pleafures of the world, is to be admitted, This is making the day holy, in fuch a fenfe, as inanimate things admit the application of the word.

To keep it holy.—This dedication of the day is to be done with a holy heart. We are to make a holy use of it, from holy motives. The Lord looketh on the heart—he sees our motives and intentions in all our visible service, and if it come from an evil motive, it is not accepted by him as true worship.—In the first chapter of Isaiah's prophecy, there is a very folemn exposultation with his people, on this subject, which all ought to read with deep self-examination. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me ? saith the Lord. I am full of the burnt-offering of rams, and the fat of fed beafts, and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands, to tread my courts. That is, with the temper and the heart from which you perform your-fervices .- The calling of your affemblies I cannot away with ; it is iniquity even the folemn meeting. Your new moons, and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me : I am weary to bear them. And when you spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; when ye make many prayers I will not hear : your hands are full of blood. Wash ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceafe to do evil, learn to do well .- Here was an inftance, in which the day of GOD was visibly made facred to religious uses, but they did not keep it in a holy manner. Although the external fervice was according to prefcription, it was vitiated by a formal, thoughtlefs and unholy heart. The prophet Ezekiel def-cribes the fame character. They come unto thee as the people cometh, and they fit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words but will not do them ; for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness .- The proper fervices, by which the time is made facred, will be prefently confidered ; but whatever they be, omnifcient holinefs feeth guilt in the whole, unlefs it be done with a pure heart. A holy dedication of external objects and of times can never come in the place of an honeft, a worfhipping heart. The holinefs of times and places is made to aid the holinefs of our hearts; and our hearts were not made, merely to fay these external things are holy, and to go no further. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. The great use of the day is to praise and love GoD. with the whole heart .-- To understand his will and our own duty most spiritually-to fearch out his law-to feek a conformity to his infinite holinefs-to grow in faith and repentance-and to prepare ourfelves for an eternal Sabbath of holy delight in beholding him. An inward fanctification in all manner of godlinefs is, therefore, remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy. On this day we are to converse directly with Gon and our own hearts, and defire those communications of the bleffed Spirit, by which he cometh down into the hearts of his people, communing with them and fetting them apart for himfelf. We should feek for fuch an apprehenfion of God, prefent at all times, but especially prefent through his world on that day; as will make all furrounding objects appear to us as folemn as they be peaceful and ftill through a ceffation of earthly labors. If our hearts be right this will be the folemnity of joy, and not of dread; and we shall feel a holy rest in admiring and ferving the Creator.

INDOLENCE is not the reft proposed for the Sabbath.-Heaven is a state of rest, but not of indolence.-So ought the Sabbath to be a reft, from those flavish labors of human life to which we are condemned in justice, and which are also necessary to preferve us from the tyranny of our own appetites, that lead to fin.-It is a reft from concerning ourfelves about worldly plans of ambition and gain-a reft from thinking of fuch enticing objects as have gained an undue afcendency over our hearts through our past converse with them. If heaven is to be a flate of reft, the time preparatory to it, may eminently be called the reft of good men on earth. The man who calls himfelf a christian, and can loiter and sleep away the Sabbath of the Lord, when there are fo many duties to be done which must be pleasing to a good heart, is indeed in the fleep of death eternal.

IF there be not a folemn fenfe of eternal things in the mind, there is no reafon to expect the Sabbath will be obferved, in the manner which GOD requires ; and fo as to fecure final falvation. Among those who profess to keep the Sabbath, do not many loofe all spiritual advantage from it? A worldly eafe is the thing they feek. The concerns of a never dying foul are forgotten. They do not reflect that they are finners, and need fanctification and forgiveness; nor that reft from worldly concerns, implies the need of industry in the fpiritual. They divide the day between an accommodation to eafe and to fashion. A partial attendance in the fanctuary is the religion of the day, and when this is finished, conversation on the most vain and uninteresting subjects finishes the decorum. A week begun in such converfation, will probably be ended with very few thoughts of GOD. His providence will be forgotten, and daily piety will be unknown. In a Sabbath thus spent there is no advance towards heaven.

He that bath an ear let him hear. The Sabbath was given to us as a feafon of preparation for another state of being. Although infinite wildom faw it best to fubject us to the labors of the world, by which the greatest part of our time must be confumed, he hath fo constructed things, that every feventh day may be wholly devoted to the interests of another world, without exposing ourfelves to want in this." We are therefore accountable to Gon for this time. We shall all be called to account for the feafon-to fhow what instruction we have gained-and what advance we have made in conformity to God.

the Sabbath.

HAVING mentioned the purity and holinefs of heart, which is neceffary for remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy; I will, SECONDLY, deferibe the fervices by which the day is to be confecrated to GoD and religion.

1. THE public worfhip of GOD in his fanctuary.

PUBLIC focial worship is as expressly commanded by God, as the observance of a Sabbath. The meaning of the word convocation is, a coming together of the people. Concerning the Sabbath Mofes commanded. Six days shall work be done but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest, an hely convocation : ye shall do no work therein : it is the Sabbath of the Lord, in all your dwellings. The Sabbath worship of the temple and lynagogue was expressly apponted, and many promifes given to the right performance, and many reproofs of neglect. JESUS CHRIST taught publicly on the Sabbath. And as his cuftom was, he went into the Synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And he came down to Capernaum, a city of Gallilee, and taught them on the Sabbath days. We find the apoftles, and the church where they were, always affembled on the first day of the week or chriftian Sabbath. Chriftians are exhorted. Not for jaking the affembling of your felves together as the manner of some is. But exhorting one another, and fo much the more, as ye fee the day approaching. Thefe injunctions are repeated, not to convince ferious people, who already know and are difpofed to comply with their duty; but to warm fuch as wifh to think, that it is a matter left for every man's difcretionary determination, whether he will neglect or join in the public worfhip of GOD. The command is positive and without any exception. It is fit that those, who receive mercies and meet afflictions in common; who fin together; who need an affiftance in duties which they muft perform together, to unite in worship, in prayer, in praife, in meditating and confessing their fin, in fearching the word of GOD, and feeking the fpirit and practice of brotherly love, which is the evidence they belong to CHRIST.

ALTHO' the manner, the hour, and the order of particular fervices, are left to the prudent determination of the church, and may be varied to accommodate them to the fpecial events of providence and the circumstances of particular people; yet the general parts of public worfhip are fixed by fcriptural precept and example. Prayer for temporal and fpiritual bleffings-praife for mercies received-and instruction concerning GOD and our own duty, are fervices proper for all people, and have the authority of divine appointment.

THE focial nature of man is ftrongly impreffed by the fervices of the fanctuary. The affections of the heart become communional. Brotherly love, which if true is the fpirit of heaven, is infenfibly diffused through the christian affembly. Here the pious mind, folemnized by the prefence of the great king of the church, and the reverence of his brethren, learns to adore, to obey, to praife, to feel a universal providence, to realize the vanities of a finful world and the glorious communion of faints in the world to come. Here piety towards GOD is quickened, and kind affections to men are strengthened. Here we rejoice with those who rejoice, and mourn with those who mourn. Many of the duties of religion are focial and our fellowmen are the objects of them, and it is impoffible we fhould be quickened to the performance fo powerfully, in any other way, as by uniting in the worfhip of our GOD and Redeemer.

the Sabbath.

WE have the example of eminent faints on facred record, and the testimony of christians in all ages, that the public worship of GOD was to them a season of great spiritual improvement and delight. David faith, Bleffed is the man whom thou choosest and causest to approach unto thee : that he may dwell in thy courts : we shall be fatisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple. How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hofts ! My foul longeth, 'yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord : my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God. Bleffed are they that dwell in thy houfe : they will be still praising thec. The ardent love, and that fpiritual improvement in the fanctuary, which the Pfalmift expressed in these and in many other places, has been felt and teftified by the people of GOD in all ages of the church. Although the focial worfhip of this world is full of imperfection, through the remaining fin of those who are most fanctified; it must still be a pleaf. ure to those, who are prepared by the beginning of a holy temper, for the focial and perfect worthip of the heavenly world.

2. THE Sabbath is a most favorable opportunity for family worship and instruction.

EVERY houfe ought to be a temple facred to GOD and the duties of religion; and every family a little congregation for prayer and praife. It is impoffible that the great body of mankind, confidered either as a civil or religious community, fhould be well regulated, when families are a nurfery of diforder and impiety. All order begins in houfehold government, inftruction and religion. It is the nature of fin to break fociety in pieces. No wifdom below infinite, could arrange a flate in which finners may have any degree of order and peace. The infinite wifdom of GOD is displayed in preferving fo much order and peace, as is experienced in this world, where all come into existence under the power of finful principles. The natural formation of families is a principal circumstance in this arrangement of infinite wildom. It is in these, that order and diforder, virtue and vice, happines and misery begin. After we know the order, the government, the principles and practice of families, we may from this determine the character and practice of the civil state and of the church composed out of them. When all reftraint and all religious instruction are neglected in families, the next generation will come on the ftage prepared to rush into all manner of licentiousness. There will be no well regulated civil government; and either the rod of defpotifm must govern, or the more dreadful horrors of anarchy, in which every man is a tyrant to his neighbours, must be endured. There will be no christian order-no brotherly love-no kind affection-none of the temper and practice by which the people of Gop are prepared for their everlasting reft.

THE importance of family government and religion, as it relates to civil well-being, hath never been fufficiently confidered and enforced. Men may in vain feek for a union of government and freedom, when families are a nurfery for immorality. But I am at prefent called to confider families, and family religion, in another point of view, and as they ftand related to the church of CHRIST and the practice of undefiled religion.

PARENTS and governors of families are minifters of God, who have the first opportunity of acting on human minds. By the law of nature he places the young in their hands; and by the laws of religion he gives them authority to gov, ern and instruct. Those who come vicious from the fchool of education, have little prospect of being amended. The inftances which we fee of reclaimed fenfualists and infidels, are generally from among those, who have become debauched in principles and practice, after another education had been given them. And in fuch cafes, the early care of pious parents was doubtlefs remembered by a gracious God. It is hard deftroying that tender confcience which is formed by the affiduous care of a religious education. The apostate from first impressions, feels that they have a power over him through his whole life. He often reflects, I was not fo taught-I am now finning against the precepts of my pious instructors; and it fometimes feems, as though I heard them fpeak back from that awful world to which they are gone. Family religion is of infinite importance to the young. It is thus, confcience receives a quickness it rarely loofes. A habit of reverence for divine things is formed, which can never be forgotten.

THESE remarks flow the importance of a religious obfervation of the Sabbath in families. It is a most feasionable time for family worship, and instruction in the principles of religion and morality. The family are convened—they are restrained from amufement and labor—they can have no other lawful employment, but to ferve GoD and feek their own duty—the world around them is still, and every circumstance favorable to devotion. There needs only the pious diligence of a father, a master, a leader in the family to guide their devotions, to impress fentiments of morality, to show them the connexion between their prefent obedience to GoD and their eternal blessed for the doctrines of christianity-and to instamp conviction on the impreflible young mind, against the destructive allurements and temptations of a finful world.

BUT this is the bufinefs of the fanctuary, faith the indolent and irreligious parent.

IT is allowed that all this ought to be attempted in the fanctuary, and where it is not done the minister of the fanctuary is in fault. But can it be expected the instructions of the fanctuary will be of much avail, when they are not enforced in the family? It certainly cannot. The mafter of the family, ought to be a minister of religion in his own house, and add his own instruction and the weight of his authority to public inftitutions. He ought to address the feelings of his charge, and fhow them that he believes in the reality and importance of religion. He should advise, inftruct, reprove, pray, and apply truth to the varying conditions of those under his care. It is his bufinefs to awaken the fecure, to reclaim the wrong, to lead the inquiring, and guide the whole into paths of duty and peace. Unless he doth this, he hath no right to effeem himfelf a fervant of the Lord in his house.

IT is often a matter of complaint, that fo little benefit comes from the public inftruction of religion. The ministers of the fanctuary, if they have chriftian humility, will own their imperfection. They must own, that they have great reafon to be humbled before GoD, for not urging family religion and the duty of christian parents with more energy than they do; but let parents and the mafters of families ferioufly confider, whether the fault is not partly at their door. Can public inftruction be of much avail, when not enforced by household instruction? Did not GOD defign, the inftruction of the temple and of the family to go together? Is it not the bufinefs of parental authority to enforce facerdotal exhortation? Is it to be expected the prayer of the church will reach the household, which are never called to pray for themfelves. The defign of infinite wildom, in his natural and preceptive inftiflution of families, was to make them fubfervient to his church and the falvation of fouls. If they neglect his Sabbath, they become nurferies of impiety and destroy the fouls of the young.

3dly. In fanctifying the Sabbath and keeping it holy, the duties of felf-examination and fecret prayer ought not to be omitted.

THESE duties are required of christians on every day, and a pious life cannot be maintained without them. None, who neglect fecret prayer, may expect the aids of the holy Spirit. None, who neglect daily examination, will be preferved in the holinefs, purity, humility and obedience of the gospel. Daily communion with God, and increase of faith and holiness, must be preferved by the daily means, of prayer and examination. The Sabbath is eminently adapted to these duties. No good man, who delights in knowing and converfing with GoD, and is honeftly difpofed to know his defects in duty, and his tranfgreffions of GoD's law, will omit thefe There is always employment enough means. for the closet. To examine the fincerity of our family and public duties-to lay open our hearts, our aims and motives befere Gon-to confess our fins which are hidden from all the world, our coldness in duty, our want of love, and imperfection in every duty-to pray for the influence of his holy Spirit; these are fufficient employment for the Sabbath, in all the hours which can be redeemed from the family and public fervices of religion. In this union of holy duties the christian ought to spend the day of the Lord. Between his public, his family and his fecret devotion, he will find time little enough to devote to the fervice of GoD.

AGAINST this fanctification of the Sabbath a multitude of objections may be raifed ; for ob-jections are never wanting when the heart is diffatisfied.

IT will be faid, this is a fervile and fatiguing employment for the day. Whether it be fo or not, depends on the state of our hearts. If it be difagreeable to think of GOD and of our duty, and if we be moved to it only by a fear of punishment, the employment marked out will be a wearinefs. The day confectated to GOD and our duty, must hang heavily on a mind which can delight in nothing but worldlinefs and fenfuality. There is no remedy for this difagreement between holinefs and unholinefs-between ferving GoD and forgetting him-between coming nigh to him and going far from him. The fame objection may be made against the whole fcheme and practice of religion ; yea, even against the rewards of bleffedness prepared for the people of God. This ought to convince all unholy perfons, that there is a great defect in the state of their hearts, and that they need to be made anew, before they can ferve the Lord acceptably either in this or the world to come.

It is allowed, that through weaknefs of the human frame, the mind may be fatigued, by too long application to a particular truth or fervice. But even here, the infinite goodness of GoD hath provided against the weakness of our frame and of our minds, in that variety of fervices, by which we are to fanctify and keep his day holy.

Serm. XX. the Sabbath.

In the duties of the fanctuary, the family and the clofet there is a grateful variety. Every focial principle, every natural affection, and every lawful felf-regard are called in to make our duty light and eafy, and to fuftain our minds under pious thoughtfulnefs. The fame variety which hath been pointed out in this difcourfe, would fuftain the mind in any other kind of application. While in the houfe of GOD we are with the multitude of our neighbours, friends and brethren. The thought of preparing and going together to an everlasting heaven of focial joys is enough to fill the foul with a divine transport.

AND is the fcene lefs endearing, lefs interefting in the family? With whom is the father of the house communing in the worship of his Saviour ? With the partner of his years and of his earthly portion-with his offspring, for whom he would willingly fpend and be fpent in all other things-with the domeflics who are committed to his care by the alwife providence of GoD. These fouls are to exist forever. He is their guide to eternity. Must not the thought of this be interesting to him and to every one? How pleafing to think, that the endearments now formed, if on right principles, will be eternal. To complete this animating folemnity, all may unite and call on their Lord-may retire to the place where an infinite GoD condefcends to meet every humble foul, and communicates by his Spirit, the joy which is unfpeakable and full of glory.

IF, after viewing thefe circumstances, any complain that this fanctification of the Sabbath, is a fervile and fatiguing employment, what can we think of their hearts? What can we think of their christian profession, if they ever have made one? It would be hard to think all fuch wilful deceivers; but they are in a ftate worfe than this, for they are felf-deceivers. How folemn will the time be, when all fuch felf-deceivers, will have their eyes opened ! May the Lord open them while it is a time accepted and a day of falvation. AMEN.

SERMON XXI.

Benefits of the Sabbath.

EXODUS XX. 8.

REMEMBER the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

IN a former difcourfe from these words the following things were proposed.

I. An inquiry how the Sabbath is to be fanctified.

II. To defcribe the worldly benefits, which refult from a faithful obfervance of the inftitution.

III. To defcribe its happy influence in preparing us for the world to come.

THE first of these has been largely confidered.

I AM next to defcribe the worldly benefits, which refult from a faithful obfervance of the Sabbath.

Many appear to have an apprehension, that religion is fomething defigned only for the benefit of another world. That if we can have it at the time of death, the whole which religion can give will beattained. Such an idea arifes from an utter experimental ignorance what religion is. True religion is the most perfect bleffedness of rational beings, in every poffible state of existence; in this world, at death and through eternity. By the present comforts of religion, a pious mind obtains the highest conviction, that it is impossible there should be a state of perfect blessednes, without a holy temper and practice. Take a perfon who hath experienced both the pleafures of finning and the happiness and benefits of religion-tell him that the heavenly state is perfectly happy; and without any other defcription he will know that it is a ftate of perfect holinefs, Having experienced both kinds of happinefs, he will have an unfhaken conviction which is the perfect one---which railes our minds to the greateft dignity they can ever poffefs-and crowns the weak, creature with an enduring glory. If this be the fruit of a holy heart ; it must be, also, of those institutions, which are defigned to promote holinefs and a fense of moral obligation. If there were no eternity of confcious existence to fucceed the prefent life, the Sabbath would be a most excellent institution to promote happines in the family, in the neighbourhood, and in the civil ftate. Although it cannot be fuppofed, that those who keep the Sabbath, only for worldly purpofes, are pious people and obey the command, to re-member the Sabbath day to keep it holy, in its high intention; there are advantages from their doing thus, which ought not to be loft. It preferves prefent fociety in a ftate most favorable to human happines, and it keeps finners from being to hardened in the ways of an unholy heart and life as they appear to become by a neglect.

- A WISE policy for the family and for the civil flate, will anxioufly preferve the Sabbath. The fame reafons which make family fubordination and civil government neceffary in the world, do alfo juftify a Sabbath and call on every friend of civil and family order to maintain it by his whole influence. We hence find that infidels, diforganizers of the civil and religious state, the enemies of government in its fubstantial forms, and those who wish to triumph over humanity and justice in their actions, have in every age gathered in array against the christian Sabbath, and endeavoured to change it from a feafon holy unto the Lord, into a carnival of licentiousness and fenfuality. This is manifest from that awful league against christianity, which has been formed in the prefent century, and has by fecret art and the practice of intrigue been carried to a more dangerous length, than any thing of the kind fince the christian æra. These men, spread clandestinely through the limits of Christendom, have made their grand affault against the christian Sabbath and the purity of family obligation. By the means used to effectuate the deep malignity of their hearts against religion, they have discovered a great knowledge of corrupt human nature, how it is restrained and how it is let loofe to all manner of crimes. Hell itfelf despairs of making the world an Aceldama, of breaking down all order and justice, and banishing the religion of CHRIST, while the family is preferved pure, and the Sabbath holy unto the Lord.

IF there be any who wifh to reject vital religion, yet ftill mean to be on the fide of worldly order; let these perfons know that they cannot have the worldly order they wifh without recurring for aid to the infitutions of the gospel, Let them fee the weakness of their own scheme of order and happinefs. Let them behold and tremble before the dignity of christian institutions. Let them at length be fenfible, that by their diftafte to the fpirituality of gospel doctrines and practice; they have been aiding an enemy, which attempts to deftroy the family and civil order they wifh to preferve. Let them join in fanctifying those institutions of heaven, by which alone, the focial state of man can be preferved and made ftrong against the raging lusts of an apostate world. ____ Some of the many benefits which accrue to fociety from the obfervance of a Sabbath I will mention.

IT humanizes the passions of men, and learns them to refpect the rights and the happinels of others.

A TRANSIENT acquaintance, with those diftricts in christian lands, where the public worship of God is neglected, will give full conviction of this truth. Even a traveller cannot pass them without observing an unfocial fpirit. The manners are rough-the words and actions of the people discover, either a jealous distance or a barbarous infolence-they are lefs pitiful and courteous-lefs feeling to the rights of humanity -and much lefs fenfible of that moral obligation, which unites men as brethren and children of the great, the divine family.

THERE is a respect due to the rational nature of man, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, in power or in weaknefs. There is an evident want of this, where GOD is not worshipped by a public affembling of the people. Our diftinct interests, employments, offices and situations in the life of this world, are operating caufes of oppofition and jealoufy; which, without a check, will come to a great height. This takes place between men of different professions—of different state in point of opulence—and among those in the fame walk of life, where little opposing interests happen to arife. By such means the neighbourhood which ought to be like a family a little more extended, is often divided in enmity, and their very proximity becomes a curse.

PRODIGIOUS is the influence of a public Sabbath to leffen or extinguish these evils. The whole people of every class, rank and condition in life, are folemnly called together. Their paffions are hushed by the facredness of the day.-Their enmities, unless exceedingly bitter, are for a moment abated .- They come together in a confiderate frame, and there is an opportunity given for reafon to speak and confcience to testify. They are called to believe that GOD, their great, good and venerable Creator is with them. By prayer and meditation they feel themfelves transported before him.-Eternity with its never ending rewards is opened to their fight. They have a new view of time, the world and their own condition in it. They perceive a moral obligation fuperior to their own little enmities and dividing interests .--- On the common floor of humble worship, and in the presence of a God whole glory darkens human distinctions of great and little, rich and poor, they feel themfelves accountable to a holy law, and that they must be judged and rewarded for all the actions done in the body. Those who govern remember that they are in the place of GoD, to execute right in the world, and that there is a court of review where their administration will be judged by the Lord. Thofe, who are under government, remember the powers which be, are ordained of GoD; and that obedience to their lawful authority is obedience to him. The rich are reminded they shall fade in their ways, and that their earthly distinctions cannot fanctify pride or crimes. The poor are taught to be patient, refigned to the providence of GoD, to fee the wifdom of his different difpensation, and exhorted to lay up for themfelves treasures in heaven. All are called to brotherly love, condefcenfion, humility, and obedience to the faith of CHRIST. All are called to think of death, judgment and eternity. The exhibition is instructive; it is impressive. It humbles pride-it leffens the objects of the world, thus deftroying the caufes of enmity and jealoufy-it confoles the weak, the defponding, and the oppreffed-it makes all confiderate in the fear of Gon-and while every one in a confcioufnefs of his own fin feels humbled before GOD and man, his fense of a moral obligation to the duties of a holy and christian life, and to treat others as he can reasonably defire to be treated by them, is greatly increafed.

IT must betray great ignorance of human nature, to deny that this humanizes the paffions of men, and learns them to refpect the rights and happinels of others. If the public worship of GOD, brings into their fight, his character and their relation to him; dependence on him; and accountablenefs to his judgment, it must produce the happy effects which have been mentioned. Mens bad treatment of each other, is carried to the greatest height, when the glory of their com-mon Creator and Judge is forgotten. They cannot fee him and his relation to the human state, without fome feeling of an obligation to justice and benevolence towards the members of his family. The impreffion on the public mind and on public manners, by the weekly celebration of a Sabbath, according to the christian institution, is greater than would be conceived, if not taught by experience. Its effects fpread through human life-they are feen in all orders and conditions of men-in all inftitutions, relations, and duties of human life. It is thus the public opinion of right is formed-it is thus that civilization and humanity are brought to the higheft pitch in all christianized states. The most bitter enemies of the doctrines of CHRIST have allowed the fact. They have allowed the christian morality to be the most excellent in the world, and the best adapted to make fociety happy; and after granting this, if they were wife, they would allow the doctrines and inftitutions which preferve this morality and actually imprefs it on the mind, to be alfo most excellent.

HAVING remarked on the influence of a Sabbath to humanize the paffions and prepare men for fociety generally, in whatever lawful form it exifts; I will exemplify this in two inflances, the family and the civil flate.

THE advantages of a Sabbath for family religion, and the opportunity it gives to the father and mafter of the family to do his duty, as the minister of GOD in his own house, have been already mentioned; to which I may add, that public worship gives great affistance in family government. As there cannot, in any place, be public order without family government; fo neither is it probable their will be a pious family government, without attendance on the public worfhip of God. This is a great means of keeping alive in the master of the household, a sense of his own obligation. By his public worship he is prepared for his family duty-feels an obligation from God upon him-and comes from the fanctuary warmed with a fpirit of devotion, which will enliven the endearing scene of family instruction and worship. Thus also, those under his care are prepared to profit by his inftruction. They are taught the duty of family obedience and reverence, and their minds are prepared to receive more minute instruction and a personal application of the truths, which have been taught more generally in the fanctuary. Experience, which cannot be contradicted, proves the powerful efficacy of fanctifying the Sabbath, to preferve order, juffice, love and government in the family and neighbourhood. Although there may be civility and polite attention, between families where Gop is not worshipped and his Sabbath kept, it is not difficult, through the outward fhow, to discover a very doubtful fincerity and a want of deep, heart-governing fenfibility. It is the latter which abides in the heart under trials and croffes, and makes men friends when we need a friend. How ftrongly this is illustrated in scenes of family trial, ficknefs and death which are conftantly happening. Let one be laid on the bed of danger, from among the fashionable despifers of religion and of God's Sabbath. Where are the irreligious friends, whofe amity was fo tender in the day of eafe-who fawned around each other with profeffions of infinite friendship and most exquisite fenfibilities of heart? They are all fled-their friendship is forgotten. The fashionable, irreli-gious fick one must look another way for help. Another kind of people are around the bed of groans and death. The plain, the ferious, the praying people who kept the Sabbath of the Lord in his fanctuary and in their families, are now the only ones who appear to have fenfibility, and who dare expose themselves to aid a dying fellow mortal. They have fought the Lord to give them fuch a temper, and they now find it. They can fpend their fleeplefs nights in kind attendance and prayer around the death bed of those, who lately reviled them for their religious fear of GoD. They can pain themfelves to be like their divine master. O religion of Jesus, how great is thy triumph in fuch a fcene as this!

A GOOD civil government is one of the greatest benefits of human life. To this christianity is favorable; and among all chriftian inftitutions, the Sabbath is most favorable. Despotic tyranny and the anarchy of a democratic mob are two extremes, placed at an equal diftance from good government and civil freedom. And hath the Sabbath any connexion with thefe fubjects? Yes, very much.

SUCH is its connexion, that it is impossible in a great community, to have rational government and a true freedom reaching to the great body of a people, without a Sabbath, regarded in the ordinances of public piety. General freedom must be founded in a general virtue of the people, and a pervading fense of moral obligation. These cannot be without religion, and religion cannot be without a Sabbath. Heathen experience hath been a thousand times convinced, that men must regard another world or they cannot be held together in this, by free civil ties. Heathen states, from political motives, uphold a falle religion, which they know to be of their own invention; while many in christian states, are fo blind both politically and religioufly, as to deny their aid to a religion which is divinely true.

THERE are, in this world of passion and fin, but two ways of maintaining government : By despotic power, and by moral information diffufed among the great body of people. Defpotic government is one of the plagues inflicted by an angry God on guilty men. Moral information, on which freedom and order depend, cannot be diffufed among a people without a Sabbath. Even under the rod of despotism, if the tyrant can be brought to keep and maintain a Sabbath among his people, it is an alleviation of their wretchednefs. It fo ftings the confcience of oppreffors and reminds them of their own accountability, that they fometimes think what they do. Though all fingle tyrants hate a Sabbath, they fometimes maintain it to deceive men through an appearance of piety. The tyranny of the democratic multitude always endeavours wholly to expunge the Sabbath of God. It can answer no defired end in that most awful state of fociety.

In a government of order, of juffice, and of freedom the christian Sabbath is a most effential pillar. By meditating on the adorable rights of JEHOVAH, and the facred obligations of moral love and justice, they learn their own rights in relation to each other-they' become acquainted with the first principles of happiness-they learn fubordination to GOD which makes other fubordination eafy-they are quickened in the focial virtues which fweeten the connections of civil intercourfe-they are taught obligation and brotherhood, rights to be granted to others and to be enjoyed by themfelves. In effecting this, the obfervation of a Sabbath hath great power. Further, the observation of a Sabbath hath great influence, in promoting that fpirit of inquiry, which ends in the attainment of all ufeful knowledge. Whatever diffipates and repels ignorance is favorable to the best interests of fociety. Give knowledge to the great body of any people, they will in the end gain poffeffion of the greateft worldly bleffings. The Sabbath begets inquiry concerning moral and religious fubjects, and from these it is extended to every other. This folves the obfervation, which is often made, that the beft inflitutions, for the inflruction of youth, are always found, where the Sabbath is moft regularly obferved. Enough hath been faid to fhow the beneficial influence of a Sabbath upon the fociety of this world. All, who endeavour to fubvert the inflitution, are acting a part unfriendly to human peace. If their defign could be effected, the civilization on which they depend would foon become retrograde—crimes would abound—confidence would be loft—and men would gradually fink back into that brutality, from which the world is in part emerged through the influence of chriftianity.

HITHERTO I have confidered the worldly benefits which refult from the inflitution and obfervance of the christian Sabbath.—I now come as was proposed,

III. To defcribe its happy influence in our preparation for the world to come.

IF it be wife to feek the happinefs of time, and if those who do any thing effentially to promote it are justly esteemed benefactors of mankind; how much more wife it is to feek the good of an eternal existence. Men place a high value upon fuch good institutions, as in their effects, terminate upon the present state of our exsistence. Laws are made to preserve and protect them, and the public will rife, as one animated body, to repel the means of their destruction. How much more ought they to be agreed, in maintaining the facredness of institutions, which are, if possible, more necessary for eternal than they be for temporal happines. The Sabbath is one of these institutions. It was received from the command of heaven. It is neceffary for the happiness of earth, and more necessary for bringing us to the happinels of heaven. Although GOD may preferve fome individuals in the fpirit and practice of christian piety, in places where the public inflitutions of religion fall into dif-use, this will not be a general thing. The general manner in which infinite wildown acts is by means publicly diffused.

1. THE Sabbath is neceffary, to preferve in the world, a knowledge of the true GoD.

ALTHO' there be much natural evidence, and a fulnefs of revealed evidence for the being and perfections of GOD ; there must be stated times for men to attend to this evidence, to examine and meditate upon it, or they will remain ignorant of this glorious truth. The heart of man naturally goes from God. It does not feek to find him, unlefs called by the difpenfations of providence or by inflitutions appropriated to the obtainment of facred knowledge. The world pleases a finful heart. Its objects, its amusements, its cares, its occupying events are many, and follow each other in inceffant fucceffion .---The more they have engroffed any one, the more blind his mind becomes to all fpiritual confiderations-to the evidence of GODHEAD, of his holy character, and the need of a holy confectation to his glory. As there is a predifposition to feek the creatures, GOD will not be fought without instituted times, in which men are debarred from other employments, and have means calculated to affift them in this. For these reasons a Sabbath becomes neceffary to preferve in the world a knowledge of the true God. It is most fitly called the LORD's-DAY and the SABBATH of the LORD, for without this means, it would foon come, that he would not be publicly diffinguifhed from the idols of the heathen, nor known as the JEHOVAH of the whole earth. This is an appointed opportunity for confidering the evidence of his being, his rectitude and wifdom, his providence, and our dependance on his will. It is possible, that without this public call, a few individuals might devote themselves to fuch inquiries, but it would not be done by the body of the people ; whereby they would become inftantly exposed to the lufts of a defigning few. So far as they did or believed any thing, they would implicitly follow the idolatry, which has always been found to grow up in fuch a ftate of things. It is a hard thing to retain a true knowledge of the true GoD, in the world, where all come into existence with unholy hearts. There must be natural evidence -there must be revealed evidence-there must be public and family inftruction-there must be a providence perpetually inftructing men-and there must be fixed and facred feafons devoted to feeking the character and the prefence of GoD. A want of one, in these many means, breaks the divine fystem of instruction concerning him, and may make all the others without avail. men confidered the labor of infinite wifdom to bring himfelf into the knowledge of mankind, and how perfect the fystem of instruction is, which he hath appointed, they would not dare omit a fingle part of it.

THOSE, who have christian knowledge from the joint influence of all appointed means, not confidering the greatness of their advantages, are ready to be furprized at heathen idolatry; and fometimes are ready to think their hearts to be naturally more wicked than their own, or they could not remain in fo barbarous and stupid a state. Before any come to fuch a conclusion let them confider the multitude of their own means; and efpecially their Sabbaths, without which they would probably relapfe into a gradual idolatry, which in feveral ages would become of the deepeft kind. This fhows the powerful influence of a Sabbath, in our preparation for the world to come.

2dly. For the reafons which have just been mentioned, it appears that a Sabbath is neceffary to attain, preferve and impress on the mind a knowledge of the holy fcriptures.

God hath gracioufly taught us by his word. This word contains doctrines necessary for falvation, which could be known in no other way; even the whole scheme of forgiveness and fanctification through the blood of CHRIST. It is a fuppofition humiliating to men, but evidenced by a natural inattention to their eternal concerns; that if they had been left without a Sabbath, few indeed would have been inftructed by a revelation. The opportunity afforded by a Sabbath, for public inftruction and for private reading and examination of their doctrines, is the principal means of teaching men their facred and all concerning con-Let the Sabbath fall into difuse, and a tents. knowledge of the christian revelation will fall with it. Being immerfed in labor and in pleafure, if men were without a day which demands of them to inquire at the mouth of the Lord, his word would fall into total difuse.

3dly. PUBLIC instruction in religion, in the duties we owe to God, and the way of our acceptance with him, depends entirely on the obfervance of a Sabbath.

ATTACHED as men are to their worldly interefts and pleafures, it must be conceded by every one, there would be no general attendance on public instruction, if labor and amusement were not forbidden on the Sabbath .- Public instruction is an appointment of God. The institution is most wife, though it must be executed by very finful and imperfect men. It is allowed, that those who are called to this duty, have reason to lament their infufficiency, and their great defects; and own that they are often guilty of unfaithfulnefs. Still GOD is pleafed by the foolifhnefs of preaching to fave fome. Although there be great deficiency in the instructors, and many times, fuch inattention in the hearers, as feems on first thinking of the fubject, to preclude all benefit; notwithstanding this, there is a great effect. Even the most inattentive, who regularly meet in the houfe of GoD, obtain a general knowledge of christian doctrines and duties. They are led to fome inquiry and examination for themfelves. If these perfons, with such means of instruction have great remaining ignorance, what would their ftate be without them? They would doubtlefs fink into a state of heathenism. If a knowledge of the true GOD, if an acquaintance with his word and the doctrines of grace and falvation, are of any advantage in preparing for another world; of the fame advantage let us efteem the holy Sabbath by which the inftruction is communicated.

4thly. A SABBATH is neceffary to teach us our own fpiritual wants. It is a feafon for felfexamination, and applying truth to our own ftate and cafe. All honeft minds will own it is a difficult thing to apply truth to their own condition, and that they feel a propenfity to delay. This propenfity is common to human nature, and when Felix faid, Go thy way for this time ; when I have a convenient feafon I will call for thee, he gave a true picture of the feelings and conduct of mankind. While fo many cares of the world are around us, are calling us, and we efteem it lawful to attend to them; through a diftafte of our duty and an unwillingness to think our state to be bad, we shall delay a thorough application of truth to our own cafe. Men suppose the common labors of life to be lawful, and that time thus fpent is lawfully employed; and if they can find any employment, which is efteemed lawful, they will postpone the humbling, and difagreeable business of searching out their own fpiritual needs and guilt. A perfon must be very wilful in fin, wholly to neglect this duty on the Sabbath; especially if he receive a public monition and call to do it, in the plain and folemn manner it ought to be given.

OUR Sabbaths were appointed by GOD both to obtain religious knowledge, and apply it to our own cafe; and without them, we should fink into a deep stupidity, becoming ignorant of our hearts and our need of a gracious cleanfing. Mens ignorance of their spiritual condition is one of the strange effects of natural degeneracy. They often have a doctrinal conviction of truth, and know that it relates to themselves and is of the greatest importance; still remaining, as far from any perfonal application, as if the truth were entirely unknown. All this may continue to be the cafe, for a long time, without any consciousnels of guilt or sense of danger. They appear to feel as if every thing were right, their case safe and their eternal bleffedness secured. This flows the need of fpecial means to call our attention to a prefent fenfe of truth and our duty. We first need means to instruct us; and then to refresh our memories and impress the things which are known, on our hearts and confciences. If a man be certain his doctrinal knowledge will not be increased by the duties of the Sabbath; this is not a reason for him to neglect them. The inftitution is of the Lord, and there is reafon to hope he will blefs his own appointment; and the day was also given to affist us, in the improvement of truth which was before knownto fearch our hearts-to understand our errorsto confess our fins-and to apply all divine truth to our own cafe.

5thly. By fanctifying the LORD'S-DAY to keep it holy, all chriftian graces are enlivened, and the people of GoD grow in preparation for their eternal Sabbath of holinefs and glory.

THE work of divine grace and holinefs in the heart is progreffive. It hath pleafed infinite wifdom gradually to bring his children, as they are paffing through time, towards the perfection of their christian character and reward. All the reasons of this dispensation cannot now be known; but in the end it will doubtlefs appear to be as worthy of GoD, as all his other works are. In this progreflive advance to the pure holinefs of eternal life, there is a great use of means, among which the Sabbath is a principal one. By this day and its duties, the influences of the world, which have been encroaching on the affections through the whole week, are fhaken off-divine truth is received-the prefence of GoD is made fenfible—the glories of his holinefs are feen by a new strength of faith-the invisible things of another world become real to the foul-the holy graces of the heart become alive and ferventthe fpirit of prayer is increafed—and communion with GOD becomes most delightful. These, to the chriftian indeed, are the confequences of faithfully keeping the Sabbath. It is not ftrange that he loves the day of the Lord, for he finds a divine energy from on high accompanying the institution, and perceives himself drawing near, though in a flow and imperfect manner, to the perfection of a holy character, and the full bleffednefs of feeing as he is feen and knowing as he is known.

HEAVEN is a state of perfect holiness-an eternal Sabbath of conformity to GoD and enjoyment of his glory, by fuch means of feeing, knowing and approaching him, as infinite wifdom knows to be the most perfect. While this holy day gives a most excellent advantage to the worldly and unfanctified, of learning their danger and their remedy; to the fincere and holy it is a preparative, a foretaste of their everlasting reward. If our hearts be right, our weekly Sabbaths will be a foretaste of heaven-they will be a quickening of the heavenly temper-and a practical anticipation of heavenly peace. The afcended Saviour, remembering the earthly members of his kingdom, and his own promife to be with them, will give those influences of his holy spirit, by which they will find it a day of reft indeed, and of preparation for their glorious and eternal reft.

WE have proceeded far enough on this fubject, to fee the happy and powerful influence of a Sabbath, in our preparation for the world to come. It is a necessary means of retaining in the world, a knowledge of the true GoD, whom we are to ferve forever. It keeps in our knowledge the revelation of his will. It is neceffary to give efficacy to the means of inftruction. It teaches us our fin and our fpiritual wants, and thus prepares us for the bleffings of the gospel. It matures that preparation for heaven, which is begun in the people of GOD by their spiritual fanctification. And it is the nearest resemblance to the heavenly life, which is admitted in this state of trial.

THOSE who diflike the fpirituality of religion, cannot be pleafed with the manner in which this fubject hath been treated. Though they may be contented with a Sabbath of fome kind; a pure, a spiritual fanctification of it, in the duties of the fanctuary, the family and the clofet will be diftasteful. Let all fuch perfons know, that if the Sabbath thus fanctified, is distasteful, heaven would be the fame, if they could be admitted to it with their prefent temper. Let it teach them the radical evil of their own hearts, and that with all their advantages and hopes, they are really in a ftate of mind unprepared for the joys of the christian falvation. And when they find this, let them remember it will be of no avail to quarrel with a human exposition of this subject. God who fet the example when he finished the work of creation, and hath repeated his com. mand to men, still reigns and will be the judge. When he judges men will be in his hand-he will vindicate his law-and he will pass his fentence, according to his own understanding of obedience. Therefore all attempts to explain away the spirituality of the Sabbath, will be of no avail to those who make them.

LET me address this subject to two classes of people.

FIRST, to those who see the necessity of family and civil fubordination.

IT is not uncharitable to fuppole, there are fome in this clafs, who feel little of their own fpiritual needs, and do not with a Sabbath for the purpose of piety. It is unhappy there should be any fuch. It is known they do not wifh fuch a Sabbath as has been defcribed; but from experience they have learned the need of family and civil order. On the fupport of these they are determined, though it be at the expense of fome felf-denial. Let all fuch know, that they cannot obtain their end without the christian Sabbath, or an inftitution fo fimilar to it, that it ought not to be called by another name. A Decade of feftivity cannot come into the place, and in fociety answer the purposes of the christian Sabbath. It may help to madden the people-to efface a fenfe of moral obligation-to enflame all the appetites for diffipation; and thus in the end deftroy all order, government and focial morality. The efficacy of a Sabbath, to preferve order in the family and in the state, arises from the impressions of morality and of our being in a refponfible ftate, which are made on the minds of men. A Decade of fenfual feftivity and diffipated thoughts is a most potent instrument of hell and its apoftles, and directly fubverts the first principles of focial compact and justice. The Sabbath derives its power, from bringing into the view of men, a holy Gon-a holy, just and benevolent law -a day of being judged and an eternity of rewards.

WITH this eternity of rewards, those whom I now address are not affected. Perhaps they do not believe it. But if God hath not enabled them to feel the force of higher motives, let them reverence the Sabbath of the Lord for the fake of present order.

IF masters of families ; let them fanctify the Sabbath in their houfes. If rulers of the ftate; let them execute its laws, ordained by the wifdom of their fathers. Let all remember, that whether the fpirituality of religion, be agreeable or not, the beft order and happinefs of the world cannot be had without it. Alfo, let them propose the serious question to their own reason and confcience; whether, if the laws and inftitutions of the christian religion be actually neceffary for the good of fociety in this world, their neceflity for the blifs of another world may not be inferred.

SECONDLY, to christians who are fo in truth, as well as by profession.

OF you it is conceived that you delight in Gon-in his law-in his glory. You do not wifh a better heaven than it will be to ferve and glorify him. Be not defrauded of the benefit of his inftitutions by a fervile compliance with the cuftoms of the world. Remember your Sabbath to be a covenant feal and foretaste of your eternal reward. Remember that it is a means to know GOD, to glorify him and to do your duty. Remember, that you will find your graces in exercife, and your comforts made fenfible to you, in proportion as you obey the command of the Lord, to keep the Sabbath holy. Remember, thefe Sabbaths of the world are foon to ceafe, and one of eternal duration to commence. This is the rest that remaineth for the people of GOD. As you ferve him now his fovereign grace will reward you hereafter. As you now find delight in his day, in his ordinances, in your closets; fo you will be delighted in the near approach to his glory. May unnumbered multitudes of guilty men draw near and enjoy this glory. AMEN.
